Agents Hunt Distelhurst Girl's Slayer At Nashville

Body of Dorothy Ann Is Identified by Doctor and Dentist.

Vigil in New York Ended by Father

Mother of Child Victim Divines Truth of Discovery.

Nashville, Nov. 14 (AP).—Department of Justice agents and law enforcement agencies of the State began an intensive search today for the abductor and slayer of 6-year-old Dorothy Ann Distelhurst, whose unclad body was found in a shallow grave late yesterday.

The body, badly decomposed, was positively identified during the day by a physician and dentist from a small filling in the second upper molar.

Two colored workmen found the body lying in a 2-inch grave in a secluded section. There was a rag gag in the mouth and the left side of the skull was crushed by a hammer.

The child disappeared September 19 while on her way home from kindergarten.

Father Flies Home.

A. E. Distelhurst, the girl's father, arrived by plane late today from New York, where he had gone in response to notes demanding ransom. He was waiting there for a contact with the supposed abductors when advised of the finding of the body.

The distraught mother, Mrs. A. E. Distelhurst, was told of the finding of a body, but the fact it had been identified as that of her brown-haired child was withheld. She surmised it and "broke down for a minute."

"I know it's Dorothy Ann; who else can it be?" she sobbed.

District Attorney General J. Carlton Loser expressed the opinion that ransom notes received by Mr. Distelhurst "mean nothing at all" and were written by cranks.

"We have no lead at all," he said of his investigation. "We must start from scratch."

He did express the view, however, that the slayer was from Nashville, pointing to apparent familiarity with the city in picking out such an isolated spot for hiding the body.

"We will start our investigation first in Nashville," he said.

"Identification Positive."

The child's body was identified by Dr. Herman Spitz, pathologist and acting coroner's physician, and Dr. Leonard F. Pogue, children's dentist and orthodontist. After an examination of the teeth they reported that "the identification is certain and positive."

Dr. Pogue had filled one of Dorothy Ann's teeth shortly before she disappeared and said he recognized the filling in a tooth of the victim as his work.

Members of the family kept newspapers and visitors from Mrs. Distelhurst throughout last night. Early today, however, it was decided to tell her about the discovery of the body, but not to reveal the investigators' suspicions that it was her daughter.

Her pastor, the Rev. Dr. B. B. Pennington, of the Belmont Methodist Church, conveyed the information to her.

Blonde Brigand Forces Victims To Doff Clothes

Detroit, Nov. 14 (AP).—A blonde young woman, about 21 and smartly dressed, accompanied by a man, robbed a downtown shoe store of $63 tonight after she had ordered Errol Perry, the manager, and George Provic, a customer, to undress.

To make certain that pursuit was not too speedily organized, the young woman and her companion gathered up the discarded clothing of their victims and hid the garments in the front part of the store.

Huge Flocks of Ducks Destroy Grain Fields

Oklahoma City, Nov. 14 (AP).—Huge flocks of ducks are destroying fields of maize and kaffir corn in Texas County by feeding upon the grain at night, county officials said in a complaint today to Robert Chandler, State game warden.

The matter will be turned over to Biological Survey officers for investigation. Chandler advised the officials, headed by District Judge F. Hiner Dale, of Guymon, that the State is unauthorized to permit shooting of ducks in feeding fields.

Utilities Seen Exceeding All In Propaganda

Public Pays for Flood of Publicity, Trade Board Notes in Report.

(Associated Press.)

A "propaganda" campaign, paid for by the public and of greater magnitude than any other ever undertaken "except possibly by governments in war time," was laid to utilities companies yesterday by the Federal Trade Commission.

That conclusion was contained in the first installment of a final report on its six-year study of utilities. Recommendations will be made later, probably suggesting utilities be required to identify clearly propaganda material.

The report yesterday questioned the right of a publicly granted monopoly such as a public utility to use money collected from the public "to perpetuate itself through the control of public opinion," and warned that these activities may not be abandoned.

The commission found that every publicity method except "sky writing" was used in attempts to influence the public.

"The total results which have been secured from all the various

Governmental Unit Holds Lead in Drive With $83,883 Pledged.

In three days the Community Chest workers have garnered a total of $600,457.08 and are running ahead of schedule with 35.85 per cent of their quota of $1,675,000 in less than a third of the ten-day campaign, it was reported yesterday.

The Government unit, headed by Maj. Gen. Frederick W. Coleman, continued to lead the way. Reported by this unit were pledges totaling $83,883.16, which gives the unit 50.29 per cent of its quota.

Group Takes in $79,447.

Closely pressing the leading group was the special gifts unit, of which Charles Carroll Morgam is chairman. This division took in $79,447.50, which, added to its former record, makes 35.8 per cent of its quota.

When the group solicitation unit, led by Walter B. Clarkson, made its report, its previous record was almost doubled. Yesterday's amount was $34,940.23. This, plus the previously reported amount, makes 20.09 per cent of this unit's quota.

Princess Buys Birthday Party With $10,000 of Her Dimes

Paris, Nov. 14 (AP).—Princess Alexis Midivani, Woolworth heiress, her prince and 120 guests celebrated her twenty-second birthday tonight in princely style.

An all-night party of pre-depression splendor, the cost of which was estimated at more than $10,000, spread through the tearoom, dining room and ballroom of the Ritz Hotel, which were taken over for dinner and dancing.

The party started with Russian hors d'oeuvres and cocktails, and ended with champagne in an Arab street scene.

A third of the guests wore titles ranking from prince to baronet. They included Mme. Gaston Gergery, the former Bettina Shaw-Jones, of Philadelphia, who was married to the French Leftist leader at Nantes-Gassicourt last August.

An orchestra was flown from London to Paris for the party, but Prince Midivani denied reports that the music alone cost the princess, the former Barbara Hutton, of New York, $10,000. He indicated that she spent only slightly more than that on the whole party.

"We don't think it fitting to spend too much in these times," he said.

Nevertheless, beds of orchids formed the table decorations and the hotel ballroom was transformed into a reproduction of a Moroccan street. There the guests danced after dinner on floors surrounded by tables close packed in night-club fashion. Each table had its silvered bucket of champagne.

Barbara's gift from the prince, he said, was diamonds, but he declined to reveal how they were arranged.

The princess plans to fly to London Sunday, where she will take the Europa November 22 for New York, while the prince goes to India to play polo. He said they intend to meet in Indo-China early next year.

Firm Fights Trade Loss In NRA Suit

$20,000,000 Business at Stake Annually, Court Is Told.

Fighting to retain the Blue Eagle insignia on its products and prevent "utter destruction" of its $20,000,000 a year business, the Ely & Walker Dry Goods Co., of St. Louis, Mo., one of the largest of the Nation's wholesale dry goods companies, yesterday obtained from Chief Justice A. A. Wheat in District Supreme Court an order requiring the Government to show cause why it should not be enjoined from taking away the concern's Eagle.

After hearing arguments by Attorney Robert Hawes, nephew of former Senator Harry Hawes, of Missouri, Chief Justice Wheat directed that the National Labor Relations Board, L. J. Martin, director of the compliance division of the NRA, and members of the National Industrial Recovery Board show cause on November 23 why they should not be enjoined from lifting the Eagle.

Section 7(a) Involved.

The controversy between the company and the NRA revolves around section 7(a) of the National Industrial Recovery Administration. The act compels employers to submit to collective bargaining by their employes.

Asserting that it has at all times complied with the code of fair competition for its industry, the company said that in August, 1933, some of its employes founded a labor union known as Wholesale House Workers Union, Local No. 18,316.

A contract was entered into with the union which, by its terms, ended March, 1934. Meantime, another union known as the Ely and Walker Employe and Management League was formed in October, 1933, and was granted the right to collective bargaining with the management.

Union Files Complaint.

The following month the first formed union filed with the St. Louis Regional Labor Board a complaint in which it was charged that the company refused to bargain collectively with its employes; that it had interfered with the right of the employes to join an organization of their own choosing; that it had coerced employes to join an organization not of their own choosing, and that it had sought to restrain employes in designating their representatives.

The regional board held a hearing, found that the company's position was proper, and then permitted an appeal to be taken to the National Labor Relations Board. After considerable dickering, in which the dry goods firm showed that it could save from $40,000 to $70,000 annually by leasing four departments of its business, the nation board decided the company was

Roosevelt to Ask Job Insurance As Major Task of New Congress; Richberg Council Gains Power

New Deal Coordinating Units Placed Under Emergency Body.

Morgenthau, Bell In Budget Talks

Off Today for South, President Moves for Loan Cooperation.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

In an effort to tighten up loose-jointed recovery machinery before his departure today for the Tennessee Valley, President Roosevelt acted yesterday to bring each coordinating agency of the New Deal under the all-embracing National Emergency Council.

He announced the appointment of an interdepartmental loan committee to "obtain improved cooperation among Federal agencies engaged in lending Government funds," and explained that this, and all other such agencies, will be concentrated under the NEC.

In a last-day wind-up before beginning the trip which will take him away from the Capital for almost three weeks, the President also:

Conferred with Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, following which the Floridian said that he is considering legislation to require all banks to take out Federal charters.

Continued his preparation of next year's budget in a long meeting with Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., and Daniel W. Bell, acting director of the budget.

Bank Unification Study.

Unification of the Nation's banking structure will be one of numerous banking and currency proposals to be studied by his committee, Senator Fletcher declared. While indicating sympathy for the idea of requiring all commercial banks to obtain national charters, he declined to predict action at this session.

The creation by President Roosevelt of the loan committee, under the chairmanship of Secretary Morgenthau, was interpreted generally as the forerunner of new moves to consolidate some of the existing loan agencies. Already intimations have come that at least one of them —the Home Owners Loan Corporation—is to be curtailed.

Besides Mr. Morgenthau, the President named to this committee the following ten members, each of whom represents one or more organizations engaged in lending:

Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of Interior, administrator of Public Works and Public Works Housing.

William I. Myers, governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

John H. Fahey, chairman of the

A New Life for Gloria, Vanderbilt Judge Says

Secret Testimony in Sensational Case Ended With Final Decision Set for Today; Mother May Get Child.

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—Prolonged secret testimony over the custody of 10-year-old Gloria Vanderbilt ended today with the dictum by Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew that the heiress must have a different life from the one she led with her mother.

A cryptic statement, issued from the bench and afterward made public, said:

"Mr. Justice Carew decided that the child, Gloria Vanderbilt, is not to have for the future the life that it had from the death of its father up till June, 1932."

Status Still Undecided.

The guardianship of the child, however, remains to be decided.

Justice Carew summoned lawyers for both Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt, the child's mother, and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, her paternal aunt, to meet in his chambers tomorrow at 2 p. m. to work out a solution.

The justice's terse statement was interpreted generally in the courthouse as leaving the way open for Mrs. Vanderbilt to regain the child if she and her attorneys can offer a satisfactory plan for her upbringing. Mrs. Whitney has charged she is an unfit mother.

Justice Carew refused to amplify his statement.

"It means precisely what it says, and nothing more," he said sharply.

"Will you aimplify it later?" he was asked.

"That will have to be worked out," he replied. "This is designed to close this case and prevent any further questioning."

It was learned, however, that the justice has filed no actual decision yet on the writ of habeas corpus sued out by Mrs. Vanderbilt.

Mrs. Whitney and her lawyer were smiling broadly as they left the courtroom after the last witness had stepped down from the stand and the judge had spoken.

Vanderbilt Party Downcast.

Mrs. Vanderbilt's attorney, her sister, the former Lady Furness, and others of the Vanderbilt retinue appeared downcast. Mrs. Vanderbilt herself was not present.

Mrs. Vanderbilt already has said that if awarded custody of her daughter, heiress to $4,000,000, she will buy a country home on Long Island for the sake of the child.

Gloria now is at Mrs. Whitney's Long Island estate, and she told Justice Carew she preferred it to being with her mother because she has a pony and young cousins to play with there.

Five Days Left MacArthur as Chief of Staff

Will Be Acting Army Head Tuesday as Roosevelt Continues Delay.

By Harris B. Hull.

With only five days remaining of Gen. Douglas MacArthur's tour as Army chief of staff, it became evident yesterday President Roosevelt would not name a successor until after Thanksgiving.

Although it is certain the colorful 54-year-old officer will continue in office until a successor is named, or he is reappointed, the unprecedented situation is causing legal experts considerable worry. As chief of staff he receives certain pay and allowances beyond his regular pay as major general. But on Tuesday he ceases to be the chief of staff under the law, becoming merely the acting head of the Nation's soldiery. What the Comptroller General will rule on this important pay item is a subject for conjecture, but his decision is being watched with a great deal of interest.

Policies a Factor.

A month ago close observers felt it was a good bet MacArthur would be retained. The Army wants him, his modernization plan is still in the development stage, he is still a comparatively young ranking officer with ten years of active service ahead of him, and Secretary Dern has asked the President for his reappointment.

But yesterday it became more evident that politics was playing a part. MacArthur's close association with the Republican regime does not sit well with a group of influential Democrats.

Whether the President eventually will yield to this group or whether he will grant Secretary Dern's request that MacArthur be retained,

Ickes Sketches Vast Program To Make Jobs

Forecasts Works Plan to Cost Billions in Near Future.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Administration plans for a more vigorous attack on unemployment through Federal spending on public works projects, probably necessitating Congressional appropriations of several billions of dollars, yesterday were forecast by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes in a carefully prepared and widely distributed statement.

Speaking as PWA administrator, Mr. Ickes said that although the program had not been formulated as to details, the motivating thought was to discriminate between work that can be put out promptly and work requiring months of preparation.

Rural electrification and grade-crossing elimination, on a momentous scale, were cited by Mr. Ickes as types of work "for quick effect upon employment this winter," and which can be completed in three to four months after authorization.

Longer Term Program.

As possibilities in a longer-term program he mentioned a great transcontinental highway, with four lanes, avoiding all congested city areas, uninterrupted by any grade crossing and with a 1,000-foot landscaped right of way on either side; improvement of housing conditions and conservation of soil and water through flood, drought and erosion control.

In connection with the housing program Mr. Ickes said that "both capital and labor can help by a fair adjustment of prices and wages which, by reducing costs, will increase the total amount of work to be done, as well as the ultimate returns to both material men and building labor," with the additional Mustn't Become Dole, He Tells Economic Security Group.

Old Age Pensions Held in Abeyance

LaGuardia Would Call All Legislatures to Aid Social Plan.

By Robert C. Albright.

President Roosevelt yesterday definitely included unemployment insurance, financed by contributions rather than taxes, as part of the Administration's legislative program for social reform.

Providing the first real insight into legislative plans for the coming Congress, his statement left the President uncommitted on old-age pensions and sick benefits.

The White House pledge was made to delegates attending the National Conference on Economic Security. It climaxed dramatic sessions of the group, preliminary to more specific action by the President's special committee on economic security.

Insurance "Not Charity."

"We must not allow this type of insurance to become a dole," the President admonished assembled delegates. "It is not charity."

Leading up to a White House reception where Mr. Roosevelt detailed his views on social security, the following developments marked conferences here:

Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York, proposed a special session of every State Legislature when Congress convenes to amend the Constitution in line with social planning.

Federal Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins called for a "bold stroke" in legislation, providing aid for every family on the relief rolls and jobs in private industry for the ablebodied.

John M. Carmody, a member of the National Mediation Board, recommended a billion-dollar railroad equipment corporation, to build high-speed, streamlined trains for rental to railroads, easing the rail debt burden and stimulating employment.

Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and chairman of the Advisory Council on Economic Security, assailed "the old regime and false prosperity," and called for congressional action on "a long-range plan."

H. W. Story, president of the Allis Chalmers Manufacturing Co., said American business is ready to aid the President in establishing a sound system of unemployment insurance, but warned against hasty procedure.

Senator Robert Wagner (Democrat), New York, co-author of the Wagner-Lewis unemployment insurance bill, announced that he was preparing new legislation to conform with the recommendations of the President's advisory committee.

Cooperative Proposal.

In pledging Administration support to unemployment insurance, the President proposed a cooperative Federal-State undertaking with reserve funds held and invested by the Federal Government, and insurance benefits administered by the States. He said auxiliary State laws also will be needed,

Mercury Due to Rise After Nose Dive to 28

Fair and Warmer Weather Scheduled for Capital Today; North Carolina Mountain Area Is Visited by Snow.

Snow swirled and banked in the lower Great Lakes region, New England and portions of North Carolina's mountains yesterday while Washington experienced a minimum of 37 degrees, bright skies and a Weather Bureau warning to button up its overcoat.

Bureau officials predicted a season low of 28 degrees early today, but added the temperature would rise steadily, and the day would be warmer and fair.

Although frost glistened in the low areas of Rock Creek and Potomac parks early yesterday, no snow is expected to fall today, the Weather Bureau said. Yesterday's minimum was recorded at 7 a. m., and the maximum of 42 was recorded at 10 a. m.

Stiff northwest winds stung the city but these will modify today, the Weather Bureau said.

The Associated Press reported snow fell generally in the lower lakes region, between Cleveland, Ohio, and Oswego, N. Y.; in the neighborhood of Syracuse, Ithaca and Canton, N. Y., and scattered over the Appalachians as far south as West Virginia.

Snowplows hacked through 33-inch drifts in the White Mountains. There was a 5-inch fall in Pittsfield, Mass., and an all-morning fall at Hendersonville, N. C., in the western part of the old North State.

Despite the heavy fall at Pittsfield, a farmer plowed an acre of land, while on the property next door sportsmen were skiing.

In Roanoke, Va., the Associated Press said, authorities at Roanoke College announced threatened cold weather had caused postponement of the football game with University of Baltimore from tomorrow until Saturday afternoon.

Marshall Field 3d Divorced; Agrees to Large Settlement

Reno, Nov. 14 (AP).—Marshall Field 3d, who reputedly settled an annual income of $1,000,000 on his first wife when they were divorced here, today was again bereft of a wife by Nevada's speedy divorce courts, and again became party to a large property and alimony settlement, terms of which were kept secret.

The settlement, made in the divorce action of his second wife, the former Mrs. Audrey James Coats, of London, was reported to provide a large sum for her future support. The divorce was granted in a secret, 15-minute session, which took place before the courts were regularly opened to Reno's divorce seekers.

An hour after appearing in court, Mrs. Field left by airplane for New York. Her Reno attorney, George B. Thatcher, declined to discuss the case.

Details of Mrs. Field's allegations of extreme cruelty were not disclosed and the transcript of evidence and the property agreement were sealed by court order. Field was not present but was represented by counsel. He did not contest the action.

Mrs. Field was the wife of the late Dudley Coats, of London, before her marriage to the Field scion, in London, August 18, 1930.

A noted beauty in British society circles, she is the daughter of Mrs. "Willie" James, famous London hostess, and a goddaughter of King Edward VII.

Field was divorced here 15 days before his second marriage, by Mrs. Evelyn Marshall Field, who charged desertion.

Woman, 70, Leaps 4 Floors to Death

New York Visitor a Sufferer From Incurable Disease.

Mrs. Angelica Witkowski, 70, jumped to her death from a window in her daughter's fourth-floor apartment in the 1600 block of T street northwest at 3:30 p. m. yesterday. She was instantly killed.

Coroner A. Magruder McDonald issued a verdict of suicide. According to police, Mrs. Witkowski had suffered from a spinal disease which doctors were unable to diagnose and which was apparently incurable. She had been taking treatment in New York, and came from her home in Queens Village, N. Y., ten days ago to visit her daughter, Mrs. Helen Jacobson, for the winter.

Another daughter, Mrs. Jane Knierin, of the Bronx, N. Y., accompanied her. Both daughters were in the kitchen when their mother jumped.

Norristown, Pa., Nov. 14 (AP).—Two men were killed and a third was seriously injured today in an explosion which wrecked and set fire to the warehouse of the Valley Forge Chemical & Manufacturing Co. at King of Prussia, six miles south of Norristown.

The dead were tentatively identified as Henrich Miners, 26, of Wayne, and Gilmour Krisconer, 32, of Strafford, both employes of the company. The injured man is John B. Cleveland, 26, of Wayne.

Five Days Left MacArthur as Chief of Staff

Will Be Acting Army Head Tuesday as Roosevelt Continues Delay.

no one, apparently including Mr. Roosevelt, knows yet. The President has not been able to devote much time to study of the selection because of pressure of other matters.

There are those who feel the continued delay means definitely that MacArthur will not be reappointed. But others at the War Department are of the opinion that, finally, the President will allow Mr. Dern to have a chief of staff of his own choosing.

What Would He Do?

Just what MacArthur, the former chief of staff and later commanding officer of the Forty-second ("Rainbow") Division, would do if he were not renamed, is another subject for conjecture. He is still the senior Maj. Gen. in the Army.

But whether he cares to revert to heading a Corps Area headquarters or some one of the Army's schools for the remaining ten years of his military career is a question.

If McArthur should not be selected and, after all, precedent is against his reappointment, the list of eligible officers is lengthy.

One of the outstanding candidates is the present Deputy Chief of Staff, Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum. He served as war-time chief of staff of the First Army during the days of St. Mihiel and the Meuse Argonne. He has nine years of military service ahead of him. Many feel he is assured of heading the Army before he quits.

Simonds Mentioned.

Another whose name is mentioned prominently is Maj. Gen. George Simonds, chief of staff of the Second Army Corps during the Somme and Ypres-Lys offensive and the present commandant of the Army War College. He has long been recognized as an outstanding tactician.

Among others mentioned is Dennis Nolan, commanding general of the Second Corps. Nolan has only two years before compulsory retirement and the President might look with favor on an eligible officer who would retire in 1936, allowing the reappointment of a new chief whose term would run concurrently with the President's.

Maj. Gen. Stuart Heintzelman, commandant of the command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., went to Groton with the President. In fact, so goes the story, it is just a case of "Stuart" and "Franklin" between the pair.

Then there are Maj. Gens. George Van Horn Moseley, Malin Craig, Frank McCoy and William D. Connor, all of whom are outstanding officers.

There is a long list of dark horses, generals sprinkled everywhere from Panama to the Philippines.

Neils P. Larsen, 82, To Be Buried Today

He was a member of the Methodist church here and was Sunday school superintendent.

Besides his widow, he is survived by two children of a former marriage, Mrs. Jennie Christensen and Marcus Larsen; several grand and great-grandchildren, all of Warren, Pa. The Rev. W. R. Hardesty will conduct the service, and burial will be in Hamilton Cemetery.

The plan will be voted on at a special stockholders' meeting on December 17. In addition to acquisition of the properties of Corrigan, McKinney and of control of Truscon Steel, reclassification of Republic's capital structure is proposed.

Tax Exemption Sought For Recovery Aiders

Austin, Minn., Nov. 14 (AP).—Jay C. Hormel, president of the Hormel Packing Co., today suggested that employes who hire new help or undertake property improvements be allowed to deduct such expenditures from their income tax payments.

He estimated, in a letter outlining his idea to 100 friends, that the plan's maximum potentialities would be the employment of 8,000,000 persons.

Between You and Me

Roosevelt Faces Some Embarrassing Moments Over Speakership Fight.

By Raymond Clapper

THE White House is doing its best to keep from being entangled in the Speakership fight, but it is having trouble doing so.

An embarrassing situation has arisen in connection with Mr. Roosevelt's Southern trip, when he will stop at Nashville and visit The Hermitage, shrine of Andrew Jackson. During this part of the trip, Mr. Roosevelt will be on the home grounds of Representative Joseph W. Byrns, House majority leader, and leading candidate for Speaker.

Normally a Representative rates a place in the sun when the President of the United States enters his territory. But in this case the White House has made no arrangements to take Representative Byrns aboard the train or include him in the President's official party. This is all the more conspicuous because Representative Byrns made a trip here some weeks ago to discuss details of the Nashville-Hermitage visit with the President.

Mr. Roosevelt has said emphatically that he is not touching the Speakership fight. He has made it clear to Administration friends that they are not to represent him as trying to influence the selection. The reason is that Mr. Roosevelt is smart enough to regard this as a battle that House Democrats should fight out themselves. Not that he has any hesitancy about trying to influence either House when he feels it advisable. But he knows that to mix into the Speakership fight would cause resentment among candidates favored and their friends. Some day, when he needed votes to squeeze through a tight place, the chickens would come home to roost.

Precedents favor Byrns because never has a party in power failed to elevate its leader to the Speakership. It would take a strong argument to upset this tradition. The only one advanced against Byrns is the whisper that the White House is against him. Whatever the White House view as to the leadership job he did in the last Congress, it takes no position as to his qualifications for the Speakership.

A number of Administration friends are working for Representative Sam Rayburn, of Texas, bald, round-faced, jovial friend of Garner, Jesse Jones and the powerful Texas contingent in Washington. They hope that if he does not make the Speakership he will be elected leader. They regard it essential that an energetic and capable friend of the Administration go into that post. A difficult program is ahead; wild men must be held in bounds. It is no job for a bungler.

The only trouble about Rayburn is that the Northern Democrats are complaining of Southern domination and object to giving both top places in the House to Dixie. The Yankees are divided between McCormack, of Massachusetts, and Mead, of New York. O'Connor, of New York, also is active, but with less support.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace had just been discussing AAA troubles at his press conference when someone asked, "Is there any possibility of buying more cattle and saving the hides?"

"Whose hide?" asked another reporter, who likes to be specific.

Senator Robert F. Wagner, strong Administration friend, was on the spot in the last session of Congress when he opposed the St. Lawrence treaty. He believes it would damage New York and other Atlantic seaports. Now the Administration is preparing to base its fight for ratification more on the cheap power issue. That makes it harder for Wagner because he is sympathetic with the Administration on power. Even so, he won't drop his opposition to the St. Lawrence project.

Relief Administrator Hopkins says FERA administrative expense in distributing relief is only 8 cents out of every dollar. That does not include the expense of State and local administration, which is where the real cost piles up. Virginia's administrative cost rose to 50 per cent at one time. It is below 20 now, which is about normal. One of the best conducted county relief organizations in the East has an administrative cost slightly under 20 per cent. Social workers regard 25 per cent as the outside permissable cost and figure 20 per cent shows normal efficiency.

Postmaster General Farley is back from the campaign and has settled down to work for the Government. Since the department has been allowed to shift for itself for a long time, Mr. Farley has a large field of opportunity.

For the first year of the Administration he was busy finding jobs for Democrats. Since last spring he has been busy campaigning around the country. While some jobs are still to be passed out, it is probable that Farley, the political manager, will be less conspicuous from now on Farley the public official will be pushed into the foreground.

He would like to be the next Governor of New York, his friends say. The New York State organization is all set for it. All that Gen. Farley has to do is to spend the next 18 months looking like a statesman.

Possibly the governorship race would involve Mr. Farley's retirement as Democratic national chairman, although there really is no good reason why a man who holds three jobs at one time could not add one more role to the string.

Whether Mr. Farley gives up the office of national chairman will not matter much so far as Mr. Roosevelt's reelection campaign is concerned. The President faces no renomination fight. Farley has erected an effective organization throughout the country which could function in 1936 with only his part-time attention. All its key people and front men are his own selections.

The Boy is ready for more worlds to conquer. Why shouldn't he try Albany?

Some of Gen. Johnson's friends have been trying to induce him to tone down in his forthcoming book references to Donald R. Richberg. The two started out in NRA as pals and it was a matter of genuine regret within the Administration when they broke. The explosive, hard-cracking Johnson and the diplomatic, shrewd Richberg made an irresistible team while it lasted. Only when they began to pull apart did NRA's real troubles begin. Mutual friends would like to see the quarrel buried instead of being embalmed irrevocably between book covers.

Mrs. Roosevelt Backs Exposing Of Social Evils

Says Way to Stir People Into Action is to Reveal Conditions.

St. Louis, Nov. 14 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt said in an address here today that the way to change social conditions "which are a blot on our system," is to bring them before the people "so that they may know conditions as they exist."

"I don't believe that many of us would tolerate certain conditions that exist in many places throughout the country if we knew about them," she said. "And when I say 'know about them' I don't mean merely to hear about them, or read about them, but actually to 'know' about them. The thing to do to get people galvanized into action is to have them see things."

The First Lady, here for the closing meeting of the 1934 mobilization for human needs, told members of the St. Louis Women's Crusade that their work was of importance, not only to the organizations which benefit from funds raised in welfare campaigns, but to communities generally, because it centered attention on social conditions which need to be remedied.

Mrs. Roosevelt's visit here, and that of Newton D. Baker, chairman of the mobilization for human needs, served to mark the formal opening of the St. Louis united relief campaign, in which $2,708,000 will be sought for 92 welfare agencies. Mr. Baker, Secretary of War in the Wilson Administration, was the principal speaker at a dinner tonight.

Mrs. Roosevelt departed by train tonight for New York, where she is to attend a dinner tomorrow night in honor of Mrs. Mary K. Sinkovitch, a social settlement worker. Immediately after the dinner, she plans to fly to Harrodsburg, Ky., to join the President.

His brother, Kenesaw Mountain Landis, the baseball commissioner, is at his bedside.

Teacher Yields In Flag Dispute

Gives Up Place But Will Fight Officials "To the Last Ditch."

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 14 (AP).—Miss Esther De Lee, 21, defiant brunette school teacher "fired" by a rural district trustee in an argument over the display of an American flag, today gave up her desk in the 12-pupil school in Pompey Hollow, but she did not revoke her decision to "fight this matter to the last ditch."

"There will be something doing tomorrow," said her attorney, D. Francis Searle, in Rome, where the teacher motored today to go over details of the case.

Searle's statement was interpreted as meaning he will carry an appeal direct to the State department of education tomorrow, perhaps being accompanied on the trip by the teacher herself.

Miss De Lee, who had continued daily to take her place at the desk in the brown-shingle, one-room schoolhouse since her dismissal by James M. Armstrong last week, came to her decision not to return after she learned her district superintendent had sided with the trustee.

The incident gained attention when the trustee wrote Dr. Frank P. Graves, State commissioner of education, asserting that Miss De Lee declined to permit a large American flag to hang over an alcove in the school where he had placed it, but substituted a smaller one. She said the large one interfered with access to the alcove and was a fire hazard.

NRA Now Sued On Trade Loss Over Insignia violating the requirement that it remain aloof from self-organization of its employes.

Eagle Ordered Removed.

In spite of its assertion that it had no connection whatever with the firm that leased the four departments, the company was notified that unless it could guarantee the leasing firm would obey all the mandates of the board and recognize only the workers' union for purposes of collective bargaining, the compliance division of the NRA would be notified that there had been failure to comply with the bargaining section of the recovery act.

Thereafter the firm was told that the compliance division had been advised to remove its Blue Eagle.

The threatened loss of the Eagle will cost irreparable injury in current contracts, an inestimable loss in future contracts, and will destroy its customer goodwill, the company said, in addition to the possibility of criminal action.

Charges Rights Violated.

Alleging that the decision of the board violates its right to contract with employes of its own choosing, the firm said the national board had "arbitrarily and capriciously refused to grant" a hearing which would have shown the company willing to negotiate with the union favored by the board.

Numerous infractions of its constitutional rights were cited by the company in its charges that the entire structure of the recovery act is unconstitutional. Among these were the allegations that the act deprived it of property without due process of law, that it vested judicial powers in the NRA officers, and that it evaded the right to a trial by jury.

The court was asked to enjoin permanently the Government from removing the company's right to use of the insignia in its products, and to require the NRA to maintain a "hands off" policy in matters pertaining to the firm's business. The company asserted its willingness to deal with the union selected by the NRA, but it claimed it could not guarantee similar conduct by Handling, Inc., which leased the receiving, packing, cooper shops and shipping departments.

Polish Actress Let In America Under Bond

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—After a hearing before immigration officials today on Ellis Island, a Hollywood-bound Polish actress, Regina Opoczynski, was permitted to land under bond of representatives from an American film company.

The actress was taken from the French liner Champlain to immigration headquarters under a ruling which requires foreign actresses and actors to prove they are of recognized standing before permission can be granted them to visit the United States. Miss Opoczynski, who said she had been working in French pictures in Paris, declared she had come to America under contract.

Ickes Predicts Giant Program To Provide Jobs

Long, Short Term Works Projects, at Cost of Billions, Forecast.

result of "a decent home within the reach of every man."

Mr. Ickes went into great detail to reply to those opposing further Federal spending on the ground the budget should be balanced and to argue that the public works program is not only of direct benefit to private enterprise but is virtually the only means now at hand of stimulating the still stagnant capital goods industry.

Prepared as an article for the current issue of the magazine Today under the caption of "Jobs Versus Doles," but also given out in mimeographed form by the PWA, Mr. Ickes' statement was regarded as possessing more than ordinary significance.

It represented not only his personal views, but reflected a movement developing within the Administration for an acceleration of spending on public works. Disciples in the Administration, and especially in the Treasury, of John Maynard Keynes, British economist, are insisting that his theory that the recovery pump can be primed by large and steady expenditure of Federal funds should be tried.

Theory of Keynes.

This group contend: that the Keynes theory has not been discredited, because it has never been given a real chance. The Briton last spring on a visit to this country suggested that the Roosevelt Administration spend at least $400,000,000 monthly, exclusive of refinancing disbursements, until recovery is reached. He predicted that would happen within six months to one year.

This school of thought within the Administration points out that not even when CWA funds were being poured forth last winter has more than $300,000,000 monthly been spent for direct stimulation of purchasing power. Its advocates say that since July 1 only approximately $515,000,000 has been disbursed in connection with public works, along with about $580,000,000 for relief of distress and $147,000,000 for the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Keynes' theory has been lying dormant since last spring but now it has been revived and is being pressed by persons closer than ever before to the Presidential ear. They contend that now, when the Federal Government is able to taper off refinancing operations, a tremendous smash should be made to prime the pump with expenditures going directly into new purchasing power.

Man, Shot Near Heart, Fails to React for Day

Danville, Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—Randy Stowe, filling station operator of Dry Fork, brought here Sunday to Memorial Hospital with a bullet wound below the heart, has suffered a relapse, doctors reported. A change for the worse came suddenly after his condition had caused interest among doctors through his failure to react in the usual way to a gunshot wound. His pulse was good, he suffered no pain and he had no temperature for nearly 24 hours.

Sheriff Archer Overby, of Pittsylvania, has arrested Haywood Griffith, Negro, charged with the shooting, and his two brothers, Major and George Griffith as accomplices.

Church, Nation Honor Cardinal In Capital Fete

Roosevelt Tribute Is Read; 31 Nations' Envoys at Convocation.

on him the degree of doctor of laws, and President Roosevelt, in a letter read by Attorney General Homer Cummings, gave him the accolade of the republic—a tribute not alone to his work in the church, but to his "inspiring patriotism."

Presented With Chalice.

Earlier in the day, the 80 Catholic bishops gathered here for the meeting of the American Hierarchy, presented Cardinal O'Connell with a scroll and a golden chalice. Much moved, the 75-year-old Prince of the Church raised the chalice and kissed the cross that had been engraved thereon.

The convocation last night, held in the gymnasium of Catholic University, was attended by nearly 5,000 persons, including high government officials, dignitaries of the church and the diplomatic representatives of 31 nations.

The diplomats, resplendent in uniforms and decorations, represented Catholic and non-Catholic countries alike, the Turkish Ambassador being one of those present.

The reading of President Roosevelt's letter by Attorney General Cummings came after the doctor's degree had been conferred on Cardinal O'Connell.

Letter From President.

The letter follows:

"Your Eminence:

"I shall not be able to be present when the Catholic University of America will confer upon you, the chairman of its board of trustees, the honorary degree of doctor of laws. I regret very much that this is so, and I wish your eminence to be assured of my warmest congratulations and sincerest well wishes on this happy occasion.

"Honoring, as it does, the golden jubilee of your ordination to the priesthood, this academic convocation must also serve to recall the long and distinguished service you have rendered your church, and the affectionate place you have won in the hearts of your fellow citizens.

"Priest for 50 years, bishop for upwards to three decades, archbishop since 1906, and cardinal for nearly a quarter of a century, your eminence has paralleled this consecrated service with a real and practical interest in good citizenship and inspiring patriotism. Your 'recollections of 70 years' of life are indeed full and wholesome.

"Very sincerely yours,

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

Having read the President's letter, Attorney General Cummings added a tribute of his own. He described Cardinal O'Connell as a great churchman, an eminent citizen and an ardent patriot.

Recalling that 15 years ago Catholic University had celebrated the golden jubilee of the late Cardinal Gibbons, Cummings said that Cardinal O'Connell shares with his great predecessor the affection and respect of Americans.

Cummings' Tribute.

"Cardinal O'Connell has not only served the church," Cummings continued, "but he has also served the Nation. He has visualized religion as one of the foundations upon which rest public order and the progress of civilization, for without religion, public rectitude and private morals are exposed to dangers that neither the Government nor the individual dare face."

The Attorney General told how, when the United States entered the World War, Cardinal O'Connell rallied the forces of his church and brought them to the aid of the President and the Nation.

"The hospitals and other facilities in the Boston diocese were offered to the Government," Cummings said, "and Cardinal O'Connell joined with other leaders of the church in pledging to the Government the support of all Catholics. His splendid cooperation made him one of the outstanding figures of the Nation during the war.

"Cardinal O'Connell, in short has been a vigorous leader of a vigorous faith. In peace, no less than in war, his public utterances and the force of his example have reminded us that the spirit of neighborliness, the spirit of justice, and the spirit of religion are essential to all governments and to all peoples, that without them human institutions lose their effectiveness, human aspirations lose their meaning, and human hearts grow cold.

"Your Eminence, the Nation honors you as a priest for 50 years, as a Prince of the Church, and as a benefactor of national life. May Divine Providence allot you many more years of usefulness to your church and to your country."

Reading of Invocation.

The invocation at last night's ceremony was read by the Most Rev. James H. Ryan, Bishop of Modra and rector of Catholic University, and the convocation by the Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore and chancellor of the university.

Upon receiving his degree, Cardinal O'Connell delivered a vigorous address, denouncing those "intellectuals" and apostles of "Modern Thought" who revel in denying all the beliefs by which men live, and who would class human beings with the ape, psychically as well as physically.

"For us," said Cardinal O'Connell, "the basis of all our thinking is the conviction that this is a universe of law and, therefore, presupposes a Lawgiver, and that scientific and social and moral progress alike depend upon our ability to apprehend and adjust ourselves to His laws.

Root of Crisis.

"Everyone recognizes that we are living through a very critical era. Not a few voices are declaring that the very existence of Western civilization is in danger. There are many roots to this crisis, but one main cause is the fact that so large a part of the world is losing faith in the cardinal principles upon which Western civilization has been built up.

"For some centuries now there has been developing, outside the church, a corrosive, critical, skeptical spirit, which in each age calls itself 'Modern Thought,' and which revels in denying all the beliefs by which men live.

"It began by repudiating revealed religion, ostensibly in the name of reason, freedom, science, progress, and the rights and dignity of the natural man. More recently it has attacked morality, denouncing all our inherited moral notions as a code of outworn taboos, rediculing the very notion of 'sin,' and questioning whether there is any objective standard of right and wrong anyway.

"Having tried to strip man of his true grandeur as potentially a child of God, in order to exalt the natural man, modern thought in our own day turns about and tries to rob even the natural man of all right to respect or trust himself.

Freedom of Will.

"The freedom of the human will is denied by various popular schools of psychology, which delight to class us psychically, as well as physically, with the apes.

"Anyone familiar with the books and periodicals pouring forth in this country and abroad today, and familiar with the opinions that pass as up-to-date and sophisticated among the so-called 'intellectuals' and among young people, realizes how widespread and dangerous is this concatenated system of negations, this denial of all the convictions and loyalties that have made life meaningful, hopeful, and even tolerable."

Golden Chalice Presented Cardinal O'Connell

Cardinal's Portrait Painted; He Discusses Changing World

these things tumbled about their ears the moral fiber of men was weakened and they no longer could face adversity

He sat for 45 minutes in a straight-backed chair, though evidently wearied by attendance at functions where others of the hierachy honored his years in the church, which now number 50.

A cold afternoon sun was sinking swiftly, chilling the high-ceilinged room in the Oblate College at Catholic University. The cardinal's thoughts wandered off to a couch in a warmer room in the house, perhaps, for he had promised himself a nap to gather new strength. Instead, he talked of how the world has changed in 50 years, and in talking forgot an earlier impatience.

Cites Spain's Troubles.

"Look at what has happened in Spain," he said, "and in other countries of Europe where pagan elements are dominant, where a former appreciation of spiritual values has given way completely to a desire to cull the pleasures of life as they pass.

"Their purpose is the final dissolution of all law, God's and man's, and the abandonment of themselves to enjoyment of all pleasures, even the most physical.

"So far, thank God, America has not been deeply touched by this. But American idealism is menaced. These influences are working underground. But I still believe this phase in America is passing, that the faith of the American pioneer, and thank God we still have that, will ultimately predominate our concepts."

One of the Nation's chief "safeguards," Cardinal O'Connell believes, is President Roosevelt.

"There is something about the President," he said. "His personality, his cheerfulness, a man who prays publicly and privately."

"The history of depressions has been that they tended, if anything, to strengthen the moral courage of the people. This one has been different due to the great material prosperity that preceded it.

"Man can't stand anything if he can't hang on to God. Everything passes, but God's word never passes.

Material Values.

"We don't need all these things for happiness. The exclusive enjoyment of material goods is childish. It is as though we had taken their toys away.

"Things always right themselves. Prosperity will return. But let's hope the opportunity for great wealth never returns, only the opportunities for an honest living."

The eyes in the cardinal's portrait appeared to squint. The artist agreed, and set out to change them.

Cardinal O'Connell's eyes are brown and sharp. His mouth and jaw bear the fierce determination you'd expect in a descendant of the Irish liberator, Daniel O'Connell.

"President Roosevelt has kept up the fine, manly spirit of America," he began again. "He has attacked evils as he has seen them and whether you admire the methods or not, the Nation is coming back, physically, materially and morally.

"People are learning that every man is his brother's keeper, but that doesn't infer limitation of freedom."

Cardinal O'Connell said it was impossible for him to feel his age, that he could play with children one minute and "preside over a meeting of prelates" the next.

The portrait was finished. The cardinal's praise was almost extravagant. As he walked from the room he said:

"I don't know how you fellows trapped me into this. You'll probably pay for it later. Good-by, I'm going to get some sleep, I hope."

Court Stings Two For Stealing Bees

Virginia Thieves Buzz Off With Six Hives.

Hopewell, Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—The alleged stealing of six hives of bees and two bags of peanuts was the cause of the arrest of Elijah Collins and Willie Townsend, of this city, during the week-end.

When brought before Justice W. Francis Binford, of Prince George County, Monday, Collins received a sentence of six months on the State Farm and a fine of $25 and costs, while Townsend received a sentence of 12 months on the State Farm and a fine of $25 and costs.

When the men were taken into custody by the police, five of the six hives of bees were found in their possession in addition to two bags of peanuts, according to local police. These were the property of W. H. Gilman, of Hopewell, and were taken from his farm, 12 miles below this city, police state.

Ducks as Well As Geese Carry Cargoes of Gold

Easton, Md., Nov. 14 (AP).—The goose that laid the golden egg had nothing on the duck Uncle Dick Harvey shot himself last Thursday—according to Uncle Dick and an expert, who assayed the yellow flecked interior of Uncle Dick's duck.

It was while he was preparing the duck for dinner that Uncle Dick found the gravel that aroused his interest and hope. Now he is assured that his was a gold-bearing duck which probably flew here from some distant gold-mining country.

So far Uncle Dick has not sold the gold. He's been too busy hunting for more ducks.

Tugwell Stays In His Old Job, Wallace Vows

Under Secretary Back In Harness Today, Praised for Rome Work.

Definite announcement that Rexford G. Tugwell would return today to his duties as Undersecretary of Agriculture was made yesterday by Secretary Wallace.

The Secretary went out of his way to defend his aid. He apparently was motivated by published reports that Tugwell would be shunted to a less responsible job after his return from a Rome farm conference, which kept him in the background throughout the recent congressional campaign.

Asked whether Tugwell accomplished anything abroad, Wallace responded:

"I think Prof. Tugwell has done his work in his usual admirable fashion. It was worth while to have him at the international agricultural conference in Rome. It was the first time America had been represented there in several years."

Cotton Freedom Reiterated.

Wallace reiterated neither he nor the AAA would seek to influence farmers in voting during a December referendum on whether they want the Bankhead compulsory cotton-control act retained.

"Cotton policy is entirely up to the South," he explained.

Questioned concerning a speech made Monday by Cully A. Cobb, head of the AAA cotton division, at Shelby, N. C., in which he warned that failure of Congress to continue the Bankhead measure for another year would lead to "ruination," Wallace indicated he believed Cobb spoke as an individual rather than as an official.

While the secretary refused to be drawn out on the subject, it was believed he would discourage further Bankhead act speeches by officials to head off charges the AAA wanted to force its opinion on growers.

Nevertheless, observers believed a majority of AAA officials, originally opposed to the Bankhead act, now would like to see it retained to prevent an enormous cotton surplus next year, which would drive down prices.

Anticipate Trouble.

Wallace announced the proposed AAA amendments, which failed of passage at the last session, would be reintroduced in Congress in substantially the same form. Asked whether he expected Senator Harry F. Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, to renew his fight against the amendments, the Secretary said.

"We always anticipate some trouble."

Pressed for a more detailed answer he responded:

"Senator Byrd seemed to be laboring under a very great misapprehension. He wanted to labor under it."

Byrd at the last session hurled charges of attempted farm "dictatorship" and "Hitlerism." He contended the amendments would vest Wallace with "arbitrary power to say who can live and who must die."

Further purchases of cattle in the drought area, Wallace said, will depend to a great extent on whether necessary funds can be obtained. He said the need for such purchases was being studied.

Involved Story Introduces New Character Star

Henry Hull's Film Debut; "Valley Forge" on Way; Amusement Notes.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

While the works of Charles Dickens are by no means strangers to the cinema, it is seldom that any of his plots so abstruse as that of "Great Expectations," previewed yesterday morning by District school officials and the dramatic desks in the private projection room of the Fox Film Exchange, have found their way into the celluloids.

In several respects this Universal production of "Great Expectations," to be seen on the screen at RKO-Keith's beginning Friday, is a unique and admirable picture. That it presents more than one problem to test the "showmanship" of the exhibitor, for the moment, is no part of this discussion.

The most important consideration, until time for the complete and formal review of the film arrives, is that it affords Henry Hull the medium of his debut upon the talking screen.

A New Lon Chaney?

In Henry Hull, the actor who made so profound an impression in "Tobacco Road" in New York last season—a vehicle in which he was astonishingly, but by no means unworthily, succeeded by that valiant former vaudevillian Jim Barton—the screen has discovered a character artist who brings to the silver sheet a distinctive and a forceful personality, bulwarked by long stage experience and a deep knowledge of the intricacies of his profession.

There is talk that Mr. Hull is to be the "new Lon Chaney" of the gelatin drama. From the standpoint of capability and mastery of makeup, there is no visible reason why he should not be, if that is his wish.

It is he more than any other single member of the cast who makes of "Great Expectations" a picture that occasionally comes close to the borders of greatness.

Next to him, I should rank that amazingly effective youngster, George Breakston, who sprang to fame in "No Greater Glory," in the role of Pip. After these two come Jane Wyatt, Alan Hale, Florence Reed, Francis L. Sullivan, Rafaela Ottiano and numerous others with the frozen and strangely immobile Phillips Holmes, to these eyes, bringing up the rear.

Leaves Vivid Impression.

But individual performances are not so important in this heroic attempt to capture the spirit and the mood of Dickens as the fact that when the full footage of a lengthy film has run across the lenses, a definite and powerful impression of dramatic vigor, literary fidelity and conscientious effort remains.

"Great Expectations" is not the pleasantest of the Dickens stories, although it deserves to be ranked as one of his most colorfully melodramatic. There are elements of frustration in it that are difficult to capitalize in pictures designed for mass public consumption.

It is, nevertheless, another argument on the side of the cinema's very evident effort to encompass something of the world's best literature, music and interpretative talent, in the pursuit of its higher function, that any attempt at all has been made to translate Pip, Magwitch, Estella, Miss Havisham, Jaggers, Joe Margery and the rest into terms of a medium to which they are not, perhaps, ideally adapted.

Dr. Frank Ballou, Assistant Superintendents Stephen E. Kramer and Robert L. Haycock and other educators were among yesterday's enthusiastic spectators.

The experiment is a courageous one and in the eyes of all thinking people will deserve the success to which any such commendable effort is entitled.

A Prodigal Returns to Pictures

No longer than four years ago Iris Adrian was a graduate of the Hollywood High School, intent on getting a job in the "movies." As a step in that direction, she secured a place as chorus girl in prologues at Sid Grauman's Chinese Theater. A Broadway theater scout "caught her act," offered her a place in the "Follies" and finally engineered appearances in a famous night club and then in London and Paris. Now she is back on the Paramount lot, assigned to a part with George Raft and Carole Lombard in "Rhumba," their next picture.

So John Peter Toohey, the eminent scrivener whose talents are devoted to the celebration of Sam H. Harris' important undertakings in the theater, under date of November 12, has this to say immediately following a few cordial remarks concerning the work of Kenneth MacKenna, in "Merrily We Roll Along," the George S. Kaufman-Moss Hart hit now packing the Music Box Theater in New York:

"'Bring on the Girls' is again in rehearsal. All the mad stuff is out. Instead of six R. F. C. men and two brain-trusters, there now are only two R. F. C. men, who are also former professors. The $400,000,000 comes down to $500,000 and even that amount is not obtained without a struggle. The farm is in, but without any of the fantastic features—no musical comedy uniforms. I'm not sure about the live stock—they're still writing the third act. All the 'extras' are out. No line of delivery men and no committee at the end. I really don't know how they are going to finish it. The whole mood is now the mood of the prologue and first act you saw. Boston and then Broadway. I'll send you some of the Boston notices."

This would be the George S. Kaufman-Morrie Ryskind comedy that played the National a fortnight or so ago, with Jack Benny in his first straight role. It will be interesting to watch how the piece fares in its new form. If they can maintain the pace of that first act, it will be a smash hit.

Newcomers to Capital.

The Blackfriars Guild's production of Jerome K. Jerome's "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," first enacted in this country by the distinguished English actor, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, to be presented next Monday and Tuesday nights in St. Paul's auditorium, Fifteenth and V streets northwest, will introduce several new faces to followers of the Blackfriars' offerings.

E. Francis McDevitt, president of the guild, will be seen for the first time on a Blackfriars stage. Known heretofore as author and director, Mr. McDevitt will assume the stellar role of The Stranger, the role created by Forbes-Robertson.

Two new members of the guild are importantly cast in the Jerome drama.

Continuing a cofeatured acting partnership that has achieved more than moderate success in four pictures, Paramount again has cast Evelyn Venable and Kent Taylor in the romantic leads of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," following "The Merry Widow" on the Palace screen this Friday. Miss Venable and Mr. Kent first appeared together with Dorothea Wieck in "Cradle Song" and scored sufficiently to have their joint services snapped up for "Death Takes a Holiday," "David Harum" and "Double Door." And now "Mrs. Wiggs."

M. P. T. O. A. Local Elects.

The Washington branch of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America held its annual election of officers yesterday.

A. Julian Brylawski, one of the Capital's veteran showmen, was re-elected president for the ninth consecutive term; Sidney B. Lust was similarly reelected vice president, and William B. Herbst, another of Washington's pioneers, was made treasurer for something like his fourteenth or fifteenth term. No one, including himself, seems to know precisely how long "Doc" Herbst has served. Nat B. Browne, of the local Warner Brothers' executive offices, was elected secretary, in which capacity he also serves the Variety Club of Washington, Tent No. 11.

The executive committee of the local organization for the ensuing year will consist of C. Cleveland, Charles Olive, Nate Stiefel, John J. Payette and Louis Bernheimer.

Sidney Lust was designated Washington's national director in the parent organization. A nice bunch of boys, in case you are interested. A nice bunch of boys, even in case you are not, as far as that goes.

Among yesterday afternoon's welcome callers at the dramatic desk were Alfred Head, accompanied by Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran, of the National, and Ronnie Ames, bodyguarded by Dan Terrell of the Warner forces.

Mr. Head comes to Washington to contribute a little of his expert stimulation of public interest in the Theater Guild's production of Maxwell Anderson's new play, "Valley Forge," to be seen in the National Theater the week of November 26, which is by way of being Thanksgiving week, in case you haven't noticed. Mr. Ames, as usual, sounds off efficiently on behalf of Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, coming into the Earle to provide the stage entertainment on Friday. You have heard of these Waring's Pennsylvanians before, I dare say, since they have played no less than some 48-odds weeks, at one time or another, in this city, beginning back in the early '20s.

Of the subject of Mr. Head's enthusiasms you probably have heard less. "Valley Forge," then, will bring back to the local stage that admirable actor, Philip Merivale, who scored so decisively last season with Helen Hayes in the same author's "Mary of Scotland."

Ruth Weston will be the principal feminine member of the cast appearing in this Revolutionary play, based on the life of George Washington. Something to look forward to, this one.

Askew Is Freed In KidnapHoax

Acquittal Ordered After Three Testify as to His Mental State.

Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 14 (AP).—Judge I. N. Meekins, in Federal district court, today directed a verdict of acquittal for R. H. Askew, young "four-square gospel" evangelist of Goldsboro, charged with perpetrating a "kidnaping" hoax and attempting to collect $25,000 ransom from his wife.

Judge Meekins ordered the verdict after the defense had presented three medical witnesses who testified as to the mental capacity of Askew at the time he dropped from sight last August. Government witnesses testified Askew used the mails, telephone and telegraph in an effort to get $25,000 from his wife and Aimee Semple McPherson, California evangelist.

Lieut. Comdr. E. F. Lowry, U. S. N., testified Askew was discharged from the Navy in 1926 at Norfolk, after he had been absent without leave, and then placed under observation for two months.

The officer testified Askew's trouble was diagnosed as a constitutional inferiority psychosis and he disappeared "as a flight from reality."

activities can not be measured," the commission said.

"But to such an extent has the utility program taken into consideration 'every public contact' (quoting a witness) that no campaign approaching it in magnitude has ever been conducted except possibly in war time.

"The record indicates very substantial results, both in increased public good will and in a decrease in the number of legislative measures to which the utilities are opposed. * * *

"The Public Pays."

"In emphasizing that the work was worth while, M. H Aylesworth, then the director of the National Electric Light Association, advised utility executives not to be afraid of the expense in permitting large numbers of their employes to attend conventions, because 'the public pays.'

"This is literally true, as the cost of all the public relations work is usually charged up as operating expenses by the utilities companies.

"But the public's paying does not end with that. For whenever such original payments are used in successfully lulling the paying public into satisfaction with improper rates or charges, to such extent does the public pay for the privilege of continuing to pay excessively as long as such rates continue in force."

Of the publicity mediums used, the report said:

"The press is the foremost current opinion-forming body of the country. One of the prime means employed very generally and extensively by the utilities in their public relations work was to secure the good will of the press and the newspaper fraternity. * * *

Text of President's Talk

The text of President Roosevelt's address to the advisory council of the National Conference on Economic Security follows:

I am glad to welcome you to the White House and to tell you that I am happy that there is so much interest in the problem of economic security.

Last June I said that this winter we might well make a beginning in the great task of providing social insurance for the citizen and his family.

I have not changed my opinion. I shall have recommendations on this subject to present to the incoming Congress.

Many details are still to be settled. The committee on economic security was created to advise me on this matter. It will bring to me, not any preconceived views, but a mature judgment after careful study of the problem and after consultation with the advisory conference and the cooperating committees.

Stresses Insurance For Unemployment.

On some points it is possible to be definite. Unemployment insurance will be in the program. I am still of the opinion expressed in my message of June 8 that this part of social insurance should be a cooperative Federal-State undertaking.

It is important that the Federal Government encourage States which are ready to take this progressive step. It is no less important that all unemployment insurance reserve funds be held and invested by the Federal Government, so that the use of these funds as a means of stabilization may be maintained in central management and employed on a national basis.

Unemployment insurance must be set up with the purpose of decreasing rather than increasing unemployment. It is, of course, clear that, because of their magnitude, the investment and liquidation of reserve funds must be within control of the Government itself.

For the administration of insurance benefits, the States are the most logical units. At this stage, while unemployment insurance is still untried in this country and there is such a great diversity of opinion on many details, there is room for some degree of difference in methods, though not in principles.

Both Federal, State Laws Are Held Need.

That would be impossible under an exclusively national system. And so I can say to you who have come from all parts of the country, that not only will there have to be a Federal law on unemployment insurance, but State laws will also be needed.

In January the great majority of the State legislatures will convene, as well as Congress. You, who are interested in seeing that unemployment insurance is established on a Nation-wide basis, should make your plans accordingly.

We must not allow this type of insurance to become a dole through the mingling of insurance and relief. It is not charity. It must be financed by contributions, not taxes.

What I have said must not be understood as implying that we should do nothing further for the people on relief. On the contrary, they must be our first concern. We must get them back into productive employment, and as we do so we can bring them under the protection of the insurance system. Let us profit by the mistakes of foreign countries and keep out of unemployment insurance every element which is actuarially unsound.

Old-Age Pensions Important Subject.

There are other matters with which we must deal before we shall give adequate protection to the individual against the many economic hazards. Old age is at once the most certain, and for many people the most tragic of all hazards. There is no tragedy in growing old, but there is tragedy in growing old without means of support.

As Governor of New York, it was my pleasure to recommend passage of the old-age pension act; which, I am told, is still generally regarded as the most liberal in the country.

In approving the bill, I expressed my opinion that full solution of this problem is possible only on insurance principles. It takes so very much money to provide even a moderate pension for everybody, that when the funds are raised from taxation only a "means test" must necessarily be made a condition of the grant of pensions.

I do not know whether this is the time for any Federal legislation on old age security. Organizations promoting fantastic schemes have aroused hopes which can not possibly be fulfilled. Through their activities they have increased the difficulties of getting sound legislation; but I hope that in time we may be able to provide security for the aged—a sound and a uniform system which will provide true security.

Loss From Illness Is Serious Problem.

There is also the problem of economic loss due to sickness—a very serious matter for many families with and without incomes, and therefore an unfair burden upon the medical profession.

Whether we come to this form of insurance soon or later on I am confident that we can devise a system which will enhance and not hinder the remarkable progress which has been made and is being made in the practice of the professions of medicine and surgery in the United States.

In developing each component part of the broad program for economic security, we must not lose sight of the fact that there can be no security for the individual in the midst of general insecurity.

Our first task is to get the economic system to function so that there will be a greater general security. Everything that we do with intent to increase the security of the individual will, I am confident, be a stimulus to recovery.

At this time, we are deciding on long-time objectives. We are developing a plan of administration into which can be fitted the various parts of the security program when it is time to do so.

We can not work miracles or solve all our problems at once. What we can do is to lay a sound foundation on which we can build a structure to give a greater measure of safety and happiness to the individual than any we have ever known. In this task you can greatly help.

Filling Station Flouts Rules

Pete Ford Will Open in Danville Despite Lack of Current.

Danville, Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—With the opening of Pete S. Ford's new filling station in North Danville set for Friday the city announced last night through its utilities manager, E. C. Brantly, that electric light and power will not be supplied for gasoline pumps. The filling station has been the center of litigation for some time.

According to Blantly a city ordinance requires that no building shall be wired without first making application in writing, posting a $500 indemnifying bond and submitting to an inspection by a city electrical inspector. None of these things, Brantly claims, has been done. He adds that he is prevented from supplying power under these circumstances according to the terms of the ordinance. Ford will open anyway.

Byrd Election Margin Sets Virginia Record

Richmond, Va., Nov. 14 (AP).—Complete unofficial returns from last week's election showed a new record set by the Democratic margin of victory. Senator Harry F. Byrd polled 109,963 votes to 30,289 for his Republican opponent, Lawrence Page, of Norfolk.

This exceeded the margin in 1933 when Byrd received 119,377 votes to 44,648 for Henry A. Wise. The official canvass of the vote will take place at the Capitol on November 26.

Job Insurance Will Be Sought From Congress

President Reveals First of Legislative Plans to Conferees.

contending there is room "for some degree of difference in methods."

His outline tallied closely with the Wagner-Lewis unemployment insurance bill offered last session, except that contributions would be substituted for taxation. The Wagner-Lewis measure proposed a 5 per cent tax on pay rolls.

Announcing no decision on his legislative course in old-age pensions, the President went out of his way to refer indirectly to the Townsend plan for $200 a month old-age benefits. He said organizations promoting "fantastic schemes have aroused hopes which can not possibly be fulfilled" and have "increased the difficulties of getting sound legislation." He expressed a "hope that in time we may be able to provide security for the aged."

Would Enhance Progress.

Similarly, he passed over the problem of economic loss due to sickness, insisting, however, that eventually "we can devise a system which will enhance and not hinder the remarkable progress which has been made and is being made in the practice of the professions of medicine and surgery."

Some conflict appeared in views expressed before yesterday's luncheon of the social planners by Relief Administrator Hopkins and the statement of his chief. Hopkins said any security plan is unthinkable that "does not encompass families on relief rolls." The President in his address pointedly warned against "mingling of insurance and relief."

"What I have said must not be understood as implying that we should do nothing further for the people now on relief," Mr. Roosevelt added, however. "On the contrary, they must be our first concern. We must get them back into productive employment, and as we do so we can bring them under the protection of the insurance system."

LaGuardia Blocks Action.

Earlier, Mayor LaGuardia, in a fiery speech, blocked round-table action by economic security conferees on a motion indorsing the Wagner-Lews unemployment insurance bill. He asked the group to sponsor no single measure, leaving detailed recommendations up to the President's council.

At one point, his views also clashed with the President's. He demanded immediate action by Congress on pending social legislative proposals, declaring there is no time for preparation of detailed actuarial figures by experts. The President urged that we "profit by the mistakes of foreign countries and keep out of unemployment insurance every element that is actuarially unsound."

Leaving the White House reception, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, expressed "satisfaction" with the President's proposals on unemployment insurance. He interpreted the President's statement as "postponing" for a time congressional action on old age pensons and sick benefits.

What President Roosevelt meant when he said his unemployment insurance program "must be financed by contributions, not taxes," was not explained clearly. Relief Administrator Hopkins said it probably contemplated "compulsory contributions" by industry and possibly by the insured. He said he felt certain no system of "voluntary contributions" is planned.

Addressing a luncheon meeting of the National Conference on Economic Security, Hopkins assured delegates the President's special advisory committee has made no final decisions, and is still open to advice.

Asks Early Action.

But he closed his speech with an impassioned appeal for early action.

"I am convinced that now is the hour," he said. "I don't see why we should wait until kingdom come to give our workers economic security."

He said the ultimate program should aid the unemployed to get jobs in private industry, recognize "the right of everyone to live in a decent home" and embrace all families now drawing Federal relief.

"It is ridiculous to say that out of our large National income we can not find enough money to finance such a program."

Speaking later before another round table conference on employment, Mayor LaGuardia proposed a three-fold platform for loans to cities either without interest or with only nominal interest; a gigantic municipal housing and improvement program in which every city would participate and a national reemployment system to put the idle back to work.

Rumors of Plot To Slay Boris Agitate Balkans

Military Cordons Surround Cities; Thousands of Suspects Seized.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Vienna, Austria, Nov. 14.—The strife-torn Balkans were thrown into fresh turmoil tonight by rumors of a plot to kill King Boris, of Bulgaria.

Reports of new intrigue among Macedonian revolutionary leaders were responsible.

A government announcement said archives of the Macedonians had been uncovered, including the names of many recipients of money for agitating against the Bulgarian government.

Plot Against Premier.

The archives were reported to include strong evidence of a plot to oust Premier Kimon Georghieff, the King's aid, as the first step toward overthrow of the monarchy. It was admitted the records showed no direct move so far against Boris, but the information of Macedonian activities aroused deep concern.

The rumors recalled similar reports of an attempt on his life on October 31, when King Boris was on a train which caught on fire. In November, 1930, shots were fired at a royal train near Manole, 100 miles east of Sofia, but Boris and his bride, Queen Joanna, escaped.

Police accused Russian Communists of plotting against Boris.

This development was complicated by dispatches from Bucharest, capital of Rumania, reporting the dramatic round-up of thousands of suspects in the last 24 hours, in an unprecedented search for foreign refugees and criminals.

Troops Surround Cities.

The war office ordered military cordons thrown around the heart of Bucharest and leading cities in the provinces against possible uprisings against King Carol's government.

All persons in Rumania were compelled to show papers or submit to temporary arrest and questioning.

The police reported first fruits of the round-up included seizure of 20 "black bourse" operators, or speculators in foreign exchange.

The Bulgarian interior ministry, reached by telephone from Vienna said no plot had been discovered there against King Boris, and no arrests had been made.

55 Farmers Face Sabotage Trials

Soviets Accused of Refusal To Pick Cotton.

Tashkent, U. S. S. R., Nov. 14 (AP).—Fifty-five cotton farmers were ordered to trial today before the Supreme Court of Uzbekistan for alleged contra-revolution and sabotage in connection with the state of the cotton crop.

The court order followed an investigation by the people's commissariat of domestic affairs. The accused will be tried under a law of 1932, which provides the death penalty for the misappropriation or destruction of state property.

Under this law several Kulaks, who interfered with the operation of collective farms in Siberia and European Russia, have already been shot this year.

Uzbekistan has fulfilled only 60 per cent of the cotton plan for this year, chiefly because, its was alleged, men had refused to pick cotton, claiming it was woman's work.

Gatti 'Sentimental' Over Last Season

To Open With 'Aida' as He Did 26 Years Ago.

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—Twenty-six years ago, Giulio Gatti-Csazza came to the Metropolitan Opera from La Scala, in Milan. He opened with Verdi's "Aida."

Tonight the veteran impresario announced he would open his last season, also, with the perennial Verdi favorite.

"You're getting sentimental, Mr. Gatti," suggested some one in the group crowded into his office.

Gatti tugged a moment at his trim gray beard.

"Sentimentality," he replied, "is forgivable in those of us who are getting on in years."

Gatti's last season will open December 22.

Official's Car in Crash; Two Women Are Hurt

Two women, occupants of the other automobile, bruised and cut, were taken to Emergency Hospital for treatment.

They were Mrs. Mae R. Magree, 44, of the 1800 block of Lamont street northwest; the driver, who, police said, had a learner's permit, and Mrs. Rosamond Robinson, 33, of Millville, N. J., her guest.

Foes Arming in Saar, Germans Tell League

Saarbruecken, Saar Basin Territory, Nov 14 (AP).—The German Front, which advocates the return of the Saar Basin to Germany, sent a lengthy memorial today to the League of Nations denying it was engaged in any illegal activities, and accusing opponents of plotting to provoke a situation which would force a call for foreign troops.

The German Front said that Separatists sought to cause a situation which would make it necessary for G. G. Knox, high commissioner of the Saar, to call in troops from the outside to restore order. It said opponents of the German Front are being trained in the use of machine guns and intended to carry out a coup d'etat late in November or early in December.

A few days ago we mentioned a chicken over on the Eastern Shore which had four legs—pretty good for any chicken. Word comes now from Lursy, Va., that J. Lynn Black, owner of a filling station on the Lee highway, has a bantam rooster with four wings. We suggest that poultry raisers cross the two to give the Sunday dinner a perfect chicken, drumsticks and wings for everybody.

A bottle of Holland gin, bottled and sealed in 1760, is the guarded heirloom of Mrs. James P. Dale, of Whaleyville, Md. A gift to Peter Whaley, sea captain and great-grandfather of Mrs. Dale, the bottle was brought to the Whaley home in 1762. Time has caused approximately half of the gin to evaporate, although the seal has never been broken.

Have you ever wondered how much per person it costs the Government for each voter to cast his ballot? It cost Franklin County, Pa., $4,042.25 to conduct its 69 polling places in the general election last week. Nearly 20,000 went to the polls, which makes an average of nearly 25 cents per voter.

Leonardtown, Md., will soon have a Republican newspaper to be known as the Leonardtown Republican. The paper, which is to be a weekly, will be published by A. Kingsley Love, a local attorney.

Fog, the greatest enemy of sea and air navigators, will no longer be a menace if a device invented by J. A. Swingley, of Norfolk, lives up to its expectations. He plans to perfect a machine in Chesapeake Bay waters to be operated by gigantic fans which will send out a chemically laden gale which, he claims, will carve a channel in the thickest "pea soup" fog for a distance of 1,000 feet.

Frederick—Considerable change in the State and county tax assessment is foreseen here when the first assessment for eight years gets under way in 1935. Reduction of values placed on property since "boom" times in 1927 is expected to bring about many reductions in assessments.

Bel Air—Former State Senator David Garfield was named foreman of the grand jury at the opening of the November term of circuit court here. T. Scott Offutt, chief judge of the third judicial circuit, charged the jury to "disregard the county political set-up" in their investigations, and to guard against becoming a "scolding" jury.

Baltimore—All previous monthly records for fatalities from motor vehicle accidents were smashed in August and October, records in the office of the commissioner of motor vehicles show. In each of those months 63 persons were killed—an average of two a day.

'Driver' Gets 60 Days For Parking Drunk

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 14.—Luther Barrett was in jail here today serving a 60-day term for operating an automobile while intoxicated, although his car was parked along a highway west of here when officers found him, answering a call.

The State law is construed, it was explained to him in court, as considering an automobile to be operating as long as the engine is running. Police said they found Barrett slumped over the steering wheel of the car. He pleaded guilty after the law was explained.

Stafford Relief Report Is Made

Sewing Project Helps 30 Children Attend School; Gardens Net $900.

Stafford Courthouse, Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—Work relief, sewing and subsistence garden projects have comprised the principal relief activities of the Stafford County FERA since March 1, according to a report submitted yesterday by Mrs. Katherine M. Moncure county relief director.

Of 878 applications made for relief, 579 were white, and 299 colored. The office accepted 442 applications and rejected 436.

Thirty children were enabled to attend school by the sewing project, which clothed them in garments collected and remodeled by the project workers, Mrs. Moncure said.

The subsistence gardens cleared $895.94. The project was directed by Miss Elizabeth Silver.

Turkey Dealers Get Bad News

Will Be "Lucky" If Prices Exceed 23 Cents, Says Official.

College Park, Md., Nov. 14 (AP).—Paul A. Raper, specialist in poultry marketing for the State Department of Markets, today delivered a none too cheerful Thanksgiving prophesy for Maryland turkey rasiers.

Farmers, he said, will be "lucky" if the price of turkeys rises above 23 cents a pound before the end of the month. Prevailing wholesale prices are under 20 cents, Raper said, and it was not expected that retail prices for State turkeys will go above 40 cents.

Raper believes this figure will hold despite the fact that this year's crop is set at 265,909, as compared with 302,170 birds last year.

"The decrease in the turkey supply probably can be traced to the high price of feed and the low prices obtained last year," Raper said. "The business of raising turkeys on a large scale is a comparatively new industry in Maryland. In about ten years it has risen from almost nothing to an industry of sizable proportions."

Westminster, Md., Nov. 14 (Spl.). Ralph S. Franklin, of New Windsor district, drawn as a grand juror for the November term of the Carroll County Circuit Court, now in session, was fined $25 for contempt of court by Chief Judge Francis Neal Parke today.

Father-in-Law Loses Suit to 1-Day Groom

Vancouver, B. C., Nov. 14 (AP).—Elmer Andrews, who said his father-in-law induced his bride to leave him on their wedding night, was awarded $500 damages against the father-in-law, Owen Farrington, for alienation of his wife's affections. In Supreme Court here today Andrews alleged that Farrington, after giving the bride in marriage and staging a wedding party in his home, followed the newlyweds to their home and insisted his daughter return with him.

Democrats to Pay Half-Million Debt Jan. 1, Says Farley

The Democratic national committee will attempt to pay off its half-million dollars of debts by January 1, Chairman James A. Farley announced yesterday.

His statement follows:

"With a debt burden of about $500,000 accumulated in part from previous campaigns, the Democratic national committee is seeking to pay its entire indebtedness by January 1.

"With a view to broadening the base of participation in the party affairs, we have decided to limit all subscriptions to a maximum of $1,000. No single donor offering over that sum will be solicited.

"Plans will be discussed fully within the next day or two at a conference between Chairman James A. Farley, Treasurer Walter J. Cummings and chairman of the finance committee, Hon. James W. Gerard, of New York. The aid of citizens from all parts of the country will be welcomed."

FERA to Organize Illiterates' Classes

Woodstock, Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.). In lieu of FERA commercial classes recently planned for Shenandoah County's six incorporated towns, but canceled because applicants were not actually on relief rolls, classes for adult illiterates, possessing education equivalent to the fifth grade and under, will be established throughout the county.

The task of setting up the schools will be in charge of Miss Frances Jenkins, of Strasburg, who yesterday assumed duties as assistant to County Superintendent of Schools C. V. Shoemaker. Miss Jenkins replaces John P. Will, formerly in charge of commercial class organization.

Exploring Social Security.

A most constructive feature of the movement for social insurance is the careful preliminary study which is being given to the various phases of this complicated subject. The conference of civic, labor and industrial leaders, which met in Washington yesterday to explore the problem, is only one of numerous indications of the thoughtful spade work which the Administration is encouraging in this field.

The attendance of Harold Butler, director of the International Labor Office, made this conference particularly significant. Students of social insurance realize that no industrialized nation is more backward than the United States in the development of these safeguards. It will not be necessary, for example, for this country to pioneer in working out a system of unemployment insurance. The experience of England and Germany attests the superiority of their seasoned systems to our haphazard and unscientific doles. To a considerable extent the Administration may profit by the success and failures of other countries, although it is recognized that great care must be taken in any adaptation of European methods to the American scene.

From this viewpoint our membership in the International Labor Organization assumes additional importance. That body is an unrivaled clearing house for accurate information on social and labor problems. Not merely in the launching, but even more in the development of social insurance schemes, the information and background to be derived from I. L. O. membership should prove helpful.

There has long been a high degree of fraternity in sharing the gains of medical science. Of no less value to the world is organized interchange of national experience in the struggle against social and economic diseases.

A Valuable Recruit.

The Liberty League is fortunate in enlisting Mrs. Charles H. Sabin among its executive committee members. She demonstrated exceptional qualifications for leadership and organization by rallying the women of the Nation to the cause of repeal. She succeeded in convincing tens of thousands of women that repeal would promote and not defeat progress toward the goal of temperance.

Mrs. Sabin is now bringing her talents and energy to the Liberty League as an instrument for giving expression to a large body of opinion in this country which lacks an effective medium, politically or otherwise, for influencing the course of public affairs. She is not acting as a partisan. She broke with Republicanism in 1932 on the repeal issue and supported Mr. Roosevelt. The present G. O. P. she castigates as "static, inefficient and timid."

This further evidence that the Liberty League can not be regarded as a cabal against the New Deal will be as helpful to the organization as Mrs. Sabin's talents. That she has allied herself with the other organizers of the movement is persuasive evidence of an intent to be constructive rather than obstructive.

An Outrage Against Merit.

Probably no measure enacted by the last Congress puts common sense more pointedly into reverse than the so-called McKellar "patronage rider" to the Treasury appropriation act. The effect of that smashing blow to the merit system has just become apparent with a ruling by Comptroller General McCarl that it requires dismissal of 900 civil service employes.

Foes of the merit system have attempted to make the "rider" in question appear as a bar to continuation in the Government service of political employes. There are also intimations that this group entered the Government service surreptitiously. But the facts show otherwise.

The Prohibition Bureau operated without the benefit of Civil Service regulations until 1927. Under ordinary circumstances the employes then serving would have been "blanketed into" the merit system. Special provision was made, however, for competitive examinations and character investigations. From 60 to 75 per cent of the employes failed to pass this rigorous test and were dropped from the service in 1928. Of the more efficient ones who received the highest ratings 900 are now being ousted by the McKellar rider.

It is true that these victims of the spoils stampede failed to pass the new examination recently conducted by the Civil Service Commission in conformity with Senator McKellar's amendment. But that examination took no account of their foremost qualification—experience in the Government service. Not only were they required to take an examination years after they had won their positions under the most favorable operation of the merit system, but the secondary test was unfair to them. There is not much encouragement for conscientious men and women to seek careers in the Government service when such outrages against the merit system are approved by Congress.

Several members of Congress have informed the Civil Service Commission that they voted for the McKellar rider under a misapprehension. It is hard to believe that such a gross injustice would have been knowingly sanctioned even by a Congress as thoroughly imbued with the spoils psychology as was the Seventy-third. The sincerity of this plea of carelessness will be put to the test at the forthcoming session, when Congress will have a chance to correct its blunder.

"Ship Money."

Under the emergency laws passed by the last Congress at the behest of the Administration, President Roosevelt was given tremendous discretionary powers over the economic life of the Nation. He can issue decrees that vitally affect the industries of the country. He is empowered to fix the value of the currency within certain wide limits. He can direct, control, and subsidize agricultural activities. He can make extensive changes in tariff schedules under certain conditions.

Moreover, he has been placed in a position to exercise these extraordinary powers because of the willingness of Congress to vote appropriations without demanding a detailed accounting of the purposes for which funds are used. Indeed, the most convincing proof of the subserviency of the last Congress is to be found in the loose methods adopted in voting funds for emergency purposes.

Although justification may be found for a temporary abdication of the legislative right to determine how public funds shall be spent, it is impossible to discover any legitimate excuse for a proposal that Congress should authorize the President to decide how much this country shall spend on naval building in case treaty ratios are abandoned. To place an indeterminate appropriation at the disposal of the President, as suggested, to be used if he thinks it wise to enter a naval building race, would be an utterly indefensible act. No peace-time emergency could justify such a surrender of legislative control over the program of national defense.

Even in the turbulent days of Charles I of England the attempt of the king to collect "ship money" without parliamentary authorization was bitterly resented by Englishmen as an attack upon their fundamental liberties. It was certain, according to one commentator, that if the system of collecting "ship money" was allowed to establish itself, the king would be enabled to "supply himself with all that he might need even in time of war without calling Parliament at all."

Despite the gulf that separates seventeenth century England from present-day America, popular aversion to policies that concentrate too great powers of control over the public purse in a single hand continues to be a sound instinct. Even if we grant the premise that great amounts of "ship money" are to be spent in the future to finance a naval building contest with Japan, the people of the United States should insist that their elected representatives shall decide how much shall be spent and what forms that expenditure shall take.

Passing Of An Emergency?

The HOLC was established solely to provide relief for distressed home owners, and to prevent further demoralization in the mortgage field through extensive foreclosure sales.

By the time its resources are exhausted it will have loaned $3,000,000,000, chiefly for the purpose of refinancing mortgages by an exchange of HOLC bonds for existing commitments on real property. These bonds—of which all but a small proportion are guaranteed as to principal and interest by the Government—have materially reduced debt charges and at the same time given the mortgagee a secured claim against the mortgaged properties.

As the HOLC was merely designed to tide over an emergency period, pending such time as private financing agencies were ready to resume normal operations, it should arouse no surprise to hear that the corporation may actually retire from business when the task it undertook to perform has been completed. No doubt there are millions of home owners who would like to share the advantages of the lower rates accorded hard-pressed debtors who have secured relief under the refinancing program. The HOLC was not established, however, to bring down the general level of interest rates on sound mortgages at the expense of creditors.

It was designed to enable distressed debtors to reach an agreement with their creditors as an alternative to foreclosure proceedings. The pronounced diminution in the number of loan applicants in recent weeks, together with the fact that private lending institutions have been strengthened by the substitution of guaranteed bonds for poor mortgage paper, gives ground for hoping that additional appropriations for the HOLC may not be necessary.

Apart from the desirability of encouraging private agencies to resume activities temporarily transferred to a Federal refinancing agency, the Government is concerned to limit the amount of its contingent liabilities in order to prevent its credit from being weakened. Such obligations, which have been mounting rapidly of late, constitute an addition to the Federal debt in no respect different from that represented by direct bond issues.

Within conservative limits it is possible to substitute publicly-guaranteed bond issues for private evidences of debt, without putting a strain upon public credit. But the further the process of conversion is carried and the longer it is continued, the greater becomes the likelihood of losses from unsound and ill-judged advances.

Control Of The Arms Traffic.

Many Americans have been asking what can or should be done by this Government as a result of the unsavory disclosures on the international traffic in arms brought out by the Nye committee. A very constructive answer to both of these questions is offered by Secretary Hull, in suggesting that a convention providing for uniform national action in this field be adopted by the Disarmament Conference still nominally in session at Geneva.

This is not a new departure on the part of the United States. Last May the proposal was forecast in a speech made by Mr. Norman Davis before the general commission of the conference. A month later Mr. Hugh Wilson, also of the American delegation, declared that the welcome accorded the plan for control of the munitions traffic had aroused greater unity of purpose than was discernible in any other phase of the disarmament problem. The publicity now given the movement by the Secretary of State is therefore to be interpreted as meaning that preliminary work indicates that the time is ripe for adopting an international convention on the subject.

Such a convention, it is known, would seek to establish three principles, which each signatory nation would enforce in its own territory after adoption of the treaty. These principles are: equal treatment for private and governmental munition factories; a licensing scheme applicable to manufacture as well as export; and an elaborate publicity system which would probably concentrate most heavily on arms exports.

Without some such international action, the work of the Nye committee is foredoomed to failure. Quite possibly an illogical public opinion could be whipped up so as to penalize only American manufacturers and thereby benefit their foreign competitors. Such a move might give some moral satisfaction of a quixotic character. It would be completely futile in eliminating the evil as a whole.

Those who are really anxious to see control of the munitions traffic, and those who merely want to capitalize public emotion on the subject, will be distinguishable by their reaction to Secretary Hull's proposals. He is making plain that any effective action in this matter must be obtained along a broad international front. The Nye committee will merit something more than newspaper headlines if it comes to the same irrefutable conclusion.

They Had A Name For It.

"Miss Pipinelis," said Agamemnon, "take this letter, please." And Zoe Pipinelis, his stenographer, took down the Mycenaean dialect of the "King of Men" in Attic shorthand. At least, she probably did.

Entirely contrary to the popular belief, phonography did not begin with Isaac Pitman, or Benjamin Franklin, or even Samuel Pepys. It flourished among the ancients: "the Greeks had a name for it." But all of the many surviving examples have until now remained a sealed book for scholars. This week, that seal has been broken. H. J. M. Milne—Assistant Keeper of Manuscripts in the British Museum, and by no reason to be confused with the author of "Winnie the Pooh"—announces that he has discovered the key to the shorthand of ancient Greece, and will shortly publish it.

For the student there is here opened—or, rather reopened—a long highway toward the Golden Age. It may fail to determine whether Aspasia had a rival in some fair "secretary" to Pericles. It may not even uncover any notes scribbled by Zeno and his strolling fellow-students when they walked with Socrates from the valley to the Acropolis.

But the Milne method has already been successfully applied to three tablets in Xenophon's shorthand. Its possibilities are sufficiently wide to justify a comparison with the discovery of the Rosetta Stone and the consequent unriddling of ancient Egypt.

Some mathematicians spend a lot of time trying to trisect an angle, but a more difficult problem is trying to square a "triangle."

The public has a habit of looking only at the clay feet of those who stand on pedestals.

Sunk Without Trace.

(F. P. A., New York Herald-Tribune.)

Until we read that the Morro Castle Association had approved a resolution condemning the official report on the ground that it had made the ship's officers "scapegoats," and ignored the responsibility of Ward Line officials, we didn't know that such an organization, made up of relatives and friends of victims, existed. The association voted to fix September 8 as a permanent memorial day for those who died in the disaster. On September 8, 1935, the papers will carry a 200-word paragraph saying that the association held a memorial meeting. In 1936 the campaign will crowd out the notice of the meeting, if indeed there should be one. The Morro Castle, we fear, was burned without a trace of additional protection for passengers.

A Potomac PWA.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One reads of the many millions being expended PWA-wise, upon skydrives in the Appalachians and in New England.

Is there, and if not, why not, a PWA project for saving and reclaiming, as a national park, the vale of the Potomac and the heights overlooking it from each shore, say from the Lee Highway Bridge to and including Harpers Ferry? Perhaps there is, and I am proclaiming ignorance. But if there is, why the delay?

Of course, such a national park should simply save the natural scene from despoilment, preserve the historic structures and relics, and afford to the more leisurely motorist, the canoeman, the cyclist, the horseman and the hiker easier and more frequent access to the thousand vistas of water and woodland, rocky headlands and forested hillsides.

Is there a commission representing the District, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, perhaps Federally organized and instituted and PWA-financed, to bring private property owners into line and accomplish the undertaking over a proper term of years? New York and New Jersey saved the Palisades, though I believe a few rich men joined to lead the way. Can not Uncle Sam, being the only modern "rich man," do this really small accomplishment for the future? GUARDSMAN.

Washington, Nov. 12.

The Simple Life.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In all that I have read about the depression and how to relieve the unemployment, there is nothing said about the communistic colonies of the United States.

If there were more communistic colonies, they would take care of all the unemployed. What few there are now take care of all their members. They grow all their food, produce and make their own clothing and exchange their surplus products with other colonies, or with someone else. The colonists are always busy.

The United States is now spending billions of dollars to help the unemployed. If they were in some communistic colony they would support themselves. Let the United States buy the land or use the public lands that it now owns. Every town or city ought to have a colony of about 100 people living on the farm. All colonies could be self-supporting after the first six months or at the most, one year.

I do not think the United States could afford to pension every person at $200 a month, but half of that would be plenty.

JOSEPH T. BARNES.

Washington, Nov. 12.

Will The Mare Go?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your short and to-the-point editorial on November 8, regarding the alleged demise of the Republican Party, invokes my comment of similar brevity.

If the Republican Party can manage to amass sufficient funds with which to wage an effective and entertaining campaign in 1936, it will return to popular favor and national power. Otherwise the "Raw Deal" will continue to run wild in a national farce with a theme of unprecedented stupidity, and Jim Farley as master of ceremonies, until the audience has grown tired of the old jokes and sleight-of-hand tricks, and calls for a new cast. Money makes the mare go, and the person who pays the fiddler usually calls the tunes. "VIRGINIAN."

The Mad Pages Pour.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: President Roosevelt on November 6 received an exulting and palpitating triumph, one of the greatest ever accorded a Chief Executive in the history of the United States.

As the mad pages of political drama pour forth from the returns of the national election, one can see democracy celebrating a victory of intelligent liberalism and freedom, no longer satisfied by platitudinous nonsense, but replaced by action, wisdom and prudence.

Under Roosevelt's leadership America has again established a flourishing society for progressive advancement of glory, undeteriorated with episodes of vengeful tactics by assiduous rivals.

The Nation has rewarded the President with confidence and respect in recognition of his great public spirit, congenial and homogeneous with the mandate and prescription desired by the masses, thereby upholding him in the eyes of the world, the champion of the "Forgotten Man."

"Inevitably Dull."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial of October 31 shows why the German newspapers of today are inevitably dull: they are newsless. They are not newspapers but simply propaganda sheets for the bosses of the Nazi Party.

It is curious to note that this dullness which has cost the German newspapers thousands of subscribers has greatly benefited the spas and watering places of neighboring Czechoslovakia. The daily Duch Casu of the industrial town of Moravska Ostrava reports that the spas have more visitors than they might have expected in these times of economic depression. Large numbers of guests are coming from the neighboring countries in spite of the formidable difficulties placed in their way by the foreign exchange and passport regulations.

Not all of them come in quest of cure, however. Many of them seek intellectual rather than physical recreation. They come to read the newspapers; they want to find out what is really going on in their own countries. Germans, Austrians, Hungarians and even Poles can be seen literally devouring the contents of newspapers published in Czechoslovakia and other countries where the press has not been shackled by dictatorship. They will tell you that in Czechoslovakia they breathe much more freely and again consider themselves free men—even though only for a time—when they can read, in public and without any molestation, honest reports of what is going on at home.

JAMES J. KING.

Washington, Nov. 8.

This Controversy Is Now Closed.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Newspapers are not published for a special class of Washingtonians. The "tempest in a teapot," under the leadership of Dr. Abernethy, is not in keeping with fair play. Were The Post to limit its advertising to the beliefs and tastes of all of its readers, its advertising columns would be a bit lean.

No reader of The Post is obliged to read the liquor ads. Those who desire to read them may do so. Let's have a fair field and no favors. I am opposed to the liquor traffic, yet I believe my opponent has a right to be heard, especially when he is willing to part with the "coin of the realm" for the right.

The advertising columns are open to those opposed to liquor—why not make use of them and expose the evil effects of liquor?

The liquor business is now legal. The Post is within its rights when it opens its columns to liquor ads.

JOHN N. QUINN.

Takoma Park, Nov. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My attention has just been called to the communication of Dr. W. S. Abernethy in your issue of October 31, and your comment upon the same. I am thoroughly in sympathy with Dr. Abernethy's position and am very sure that practically every home-loving inhabitant of our city is like minded.

I am informed by an official that there are over 700 inmates at the Home for the Aged and Infirm (corresponding to the old-time poorhouse) and that 90 per cent of these are there as a direct charge against the liquor traffic. This fact alone should be sufficient to turn any right-minded man against the abominable business. The Bible says, "It biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

So long as the Congress has gone on record to the effect that beer is nonintoxicating, and, to a certain extent, "respectabilized" the traffic in beer, I suppose a publisher can feel justified in publishing the brewer's ads, but if you have any regard for the influence of your paper in the homes of your fellow citizens, I urge you to purge its columns of this damnable scourge.

FRANCIS S. BROWNE.

Washington, Nov. 1.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I admire very much Dr. Abernethy's letter published in The Post October 31 deploring the venality of the newspapers in publishing liquor advertisements. I can not agree with the editor that Dr. Abernethy's expression was immoderate. If all the religious leaders should show the same interest that he has, the situation would soon be vastly better.

Seeing the huge success of the diabolical advertising propaganda that has made cigarette smokers of millions of our young girls, the liquor dealers will probably soon be copying that propaganda. I judge the newspapers will welcome that additional revenue. Would you like to see these girls acquire the liquor habit also? PHILIP THOMPSON.

Clarendon, Va., Oct. 31.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I heartily indorse the letter of Dr. Abernethy concerning the large number of liquor ads carried by The Post.

I have been a subscriber of The Post for 20 years and except for the large number of liquor ads I think the paper is better than ever before. A great many people are disgusted with your surrender to the whisky interests. The court and police records speak louder than anything I can say. Surely you do not want to put yourselves on the side of drunkenness and crime, but how can it be otherwise if you continue feeding our home and children with ads advising us to use this or that kind of liquor?

It will pay you in the long run to cut such ads to a minimum.

The Boy Who Was Afraid.

Post Office, Thursday.

"HE'S dead," the Frenchman insisted. "Let him alone. And hurry!"

It was a bad sector at the best of times, and worse than usual just then. The French were advancing five minutes after the Americans, who had gone over the top on the left. The body, in a fresh uniform, was lying under bits of an old gun-carriage.

Forbes didn't believe it was dead. "And anyhow," he says when he tells the story, "I saw he was an American, so I thought I'd have a look.

"I pulled him out. He was just a boy. And there wasn't a scratch on him."

Forbes was a liaison officer with that veteran Burgundian brigade. He'd enlisted in the French army at the start of the war, been released for American service when the United States came in, and then detailed back to the French.

Forbes says:

"The only thing the matter with the boy was that he was paralyzed by fright—simply paralyzed.

"Fear's a funny thing," says Forbes. "I mean a terrible thing. It's just awful to feel—worse to look at, especially battle-fear

"Sometimes that's mental; sometimes it's physical. Mostly it's both. Now and then a man gets over it—conquers it, or grows used to the danger, or is finally so dulled that he can't care anymore. Sometimes it hits a guy at the start—sometimes after months of fighting. And some fellows never have it at all—the stupid ones, mostly. But I've known artillerymen—brave enough in one sense—who served their guns right through the whole show, yet whose knees doubled under them every time their battery fired, right up to Armistice Day.

"Well, I re-parked this American kid in that old wreckage till our little advance was over. It was no safer than anywhere else, but I knew he was too scared to leave it. And, sure enough, when things quieted down and I went back for him, there he was.

"Never mind his name or his outfit. He'd been an enthusiast. He'd run away from home and volunteered—lied about his age. This was his first engagement. His whole brigade was made up of raw troops.

"You never saw anybody more ashamed than this kid—cried like a baby. Not because he was afraid, since the advance was over. And not because he had any idea of the danger he stood in right now—the danger of the thing that happens, under regulations, to runaways. This poor simp didn't happen to think of that. He was ashamed because he'd gone back on all his ideals—because he'd been afraid.

"What was I to do with him? I had to send him back to his own outfit, but of course the Americans would shoot him . . .

"I couldn't have that boy's blood on my hands' I just had to shift the responsibility. So I went, in fear and trembling myself, to my French Major, who'd won the Military Medal when he was a simple soldier in Algiers—one of the hardest-boiled and bravest fellows I ever met. I told him he'd have to send the kid back—it was his job, not mine.

"He frowned all through my tale of woe. Then he said:

"'Oh, yes, your fellow-countrymen will immediately decide to shoot the boy. They are still too new to war to understand it. But they must be prevented. Fear? Why, we all have fear—when we know what war is. I shall write a letter that he may take to his commander, saying that he unavoidably became separated from his regiment, fell in with us and served gallantly.'

"That's what the Major said!

"And then he said:

"'But no! I will not. After all, I am only a major—a major's word is nothing. I will ask the Colonel."

* * * *

"We went to the Colonel. That colonel had a terrific rep'—and deserved it. He growled:

"'Certainly they will want to shoot the boy. Certainly they should not. First-action fright? Everybody would run away from his first action—if he could, or dared. I shall indeed write the letter.'

"And then he had a better thought. He said:

"'After all, I am only a colonel. A colonel—it is nothing. We shall go to the General."

Our General was the worst martinet ever graduated from St. Cyr—besides which, he was just then sore because the Americans had that day made a better showing than his own brigade. But he bellowed:

"'Thousands of good soldiers have been lost by being shot for running away from their first engagement! Such shootings are criminally wasteful! I will indeed write the letter.'

"And he wrote it.

"But the funniest thing about the whole matter," Forbes concludes, "is that that boy came out of the war with our Congressional Medal—and that he earned it. I read about it in the newspapers after I got back home."

Italy Held Key Power in New Line-up Abroad

All Roads Lead to Rome as Countries Jockey for Strategic Positions.

By Leonid I. Strakhovsky.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

THIS month undoubtedly will be chronicled by future historians as one of great importance in the development of Europe, because it is precisely now that a new alignment of European powers is in the process of formation.

Extraordinarily enough, the key position with regard to the immediate destinies of Europe is occupied by Italy, personified by Benito Mussolini, son of a blacksmith and the most extraordinary figure of our times. And this only 12 years to a month after the spectacular march on Rome of a handful of blackshirts (October 30, 1922) led by this former Socialist, and duly recognized as an Italian statesman of at least equal rank with Garibaldi or Cavour.

After the unification of Italy in 1870, that peninsular kingdom played an important part in the complicated game of European politics. Italy was sought in turn by the Dual Alliance and the Triple Entente. Thus she was able to have agreements with both groups, giving her the opportunity of choice when the fatal test of power plunged Europe into the great chaos of 1914.

But after the war Italy suffered a serious diminution of her international prestige.

It is the energy and the diplomacy of Mussolini which have raised her once more to the ranks of first-class powers. And now the old saying comes true again: All roads lead to Rome! The ministers of foreign affairs of Hungary, Austria, France, Czechoslavakia and Rumania are all undertaking pilgrimages to the Eternal City.

• • • •

EVER since the signing of the Treaty of Triannon, Hungary has attempted to obtain a revision of this document. Early in the game she had obtained assurances from Mussolini that he considered such a revision not only an act of justice for Hungary, but also of great necessity for the preservation of peace in Europe. Thus it was only natural that, when the opportunity presented itself, Hungary should turn to Italy for support. Although the triple agreement between Austria, Hungary and Italy cannot be classified as a formal alliance, it obviously is an indication of kindred sentiments between the three countries, notwithstanding the diversity of their interests.

Austria does not seek revision of her postwar treaty, because the only territory inhabited by German-speaking people of Austrian origin which she might claim has been adjudicated to Italy. Therefore, Austria is seeking a union with Germany, the most natural way out of her difficulties. However, this way is blocked simultaneously by France, who does not wish to face a stronger Germany, and by Italy, who does not wish to have a common frontier with Germany, and consequent strengthening of anti-Italian movements in the former Austrian Tyrol.

Hungary seeks revision as the alpha and omega of her foreign policy. The territories she wants to regain are now part of the states of Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia. Therefore, she turns naturally to the power or powers which are at odds with these states.

Italy apparently follows the old Roman principle: divide et impera (divide and rule.) She supports Austria in order to prevent her falling into the hands of Germany. She lends a helping hand to Hungary in order to keep her as a pawn in her bid for a dominating position in the game of international politics. In this way, she hopes to prevent any possible understandings between Hungary and the powers of the Little Entente.

• • • •

THUS, on the whole, this recent political combination of Austria, Hungary and Italy has the earmarks of expediency and not of real fundamental community of interests. But so long as Italy maintains it, the endeavor of France to assure peace in Europe is materially weakened.

The ill-fated journey of the late King Alexander of Yugoslavia was to be an important preliminary step to a new alignment of European powers. Both Alexander and Foreign Minister Barthou, of France, had hopes of finding a solution for unsettled Italo-Yugoslav relations, thus paving the road to a Franco-Italian understanding or even an alliance.

Obviously the recent visit of Premier Goemboes, of Hungary, to Rome, to be followed by that of Chancellor Schusschnigg, of Austria, is an attempt to offset the possibility of drawing Italy into a French combination. That inevitably would lessen Italy's outspoken support of both Austria and Hungary or, at least, make such a support conditional on the establishment of better relations between Hungary and the Little Entente.

However, it is quite possible that French arguments may be decisive enough to induce Mussolini to change front and march hand in hand with his Latin neighbor. In this case the loser will be Hungary, because so far as Austria is concerned both Italy and France have identical views. They are to preserve Austrian independence at all costs in order to prevent union with Germany.

At present there are only two solid blocks in Europe—the Little Entente and the Balkan Union. The latter, composed of Greece, Rumania, Turkey and Yogoslavia, reaffirmed its solidarity at an extraordinary session held in Belgrade October 19. The former, in its session held at Geneva during the last meeting of the Assembly of the League of Nations, found complete understanding on all points concerning its three members.

• • • •

MEANWHIlsE Poland, France's stanch ally of postwar days, seems to be drifting away from its historical protector. Notwithstanding official assurances to the contrary, it is obvious that Poland has decided to play a lone hand. The recent overtures of Hungary, which marked the visit of Goemboes to Warsaw, are most indicative. There looms on the horizon of European politics the possibility of a Germano-Polish-Hungarian combination as opposed to an Italo-Franco-British-Russian entente and a solid block composed of Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey.

Will this be a new deal in European politics? And if so, will this new deal be a square deal? Will it mean the end of France's hegemony and an adequate redistribution of power tending to maintain peace? Or will it mean merely an alignment into strategic positions for a better chance in the event of a forthcoming war? Only the future can tell.

Some More Democracy

WELL, I hope the New Dealers are satisfied now, seeing what they have done to our town. I knew from the beginning that their informality would sooner or later bring us native Washingtonians to grief. You have only to read the biographical sketch of Senator-elect Moore, of New Jersey, by Mr. Edward M. Gilroy, in yesterday's Post to see just what position they have put us in.

Mr. Gilroy, seeking to impress us with the engaging nature of the Senator-elect says he will make friends easy when he comes down here, that he "will never get upstage."

Now, wouldn't that defeat you? Here comes a man from New Jersey, of all States, with his biographer assuring us that we need not feel uncomfortable, that he won't get upstage with us.

• • • •

How we have fallen, we Washingtonians—natives and long-time residents. We who have so successfully maintained a condescending attitude toward these people who come and go. Won't be upstage with us! Ugh! Why, the question is or would have been in the past, what will be our attitude toward him.

Something has happened, fellow Washingtonians. Our prestige has taken a flop. Why, we used to have the newcomers eating out of our hands. Such illusions surrounded us they came here looking like the freshmen during their first few weeks at college. It was their custom to spend at least their first term trying to crash our smart salons.

So great a tradition had we built around some of our hosts that many a statesman went away from here broken-hearted and an enemy of the rich, because he couldn't make the grade.

And now, it is said on behalf of New Jersey's Senator-elect that he won't be upstage with us. I suppose it is meant that he will let us come to see him, whereas, if we are to maintain our aura of greatness, it must be that we will take up the matter of letting him come to see us.

Hah, what a far cry, indeed, is the attitude of the Senator-elect from the time when the Chevy Chase Club expelled Senator Joe Robinson for socking one of our surgeons in the jaw. I suppose Mr. Gilroy means to say that Senator-elect Moore, being a democratic fellow, could be persuaded to join just to help the club out.

• • • •

I'm not arguing the merits of Mr. Gilroy's appraisal of our situation. He is the political correspondent of the Newark News. He should be capable of judging us. But we can't permit this rating to stand.

It is easy, of course, to tell where he got it from. He got it from the way the New Dealers have of calling everybody by his first name. Only last week in New York I heard a fellow say he was coming down to see Jimmie Moffett, of the Housing Administration; Harold Ickes, of PWA; Henry Morgenthau, Frances Perkins, Ferdy Percora, Jimmy Landis, Henry Wallace—just dropping down to see Jimmie, Harold, Henry, Frances and the rest of them, and also the chief. A stranger would have thought he was on his way to a college reunion.

• • • •

You can see where such as this has gotten us. Gone is the tradition of our salons and our noted hosts, gone is the upper hand we had over the people who come and go. It used to be that the new Senator and his wife were told as they left home to try to get accepted by So-and-So. Now the question is whether they will accept us.

It means that the dowagers will quit bringing daughters here for their debuts.

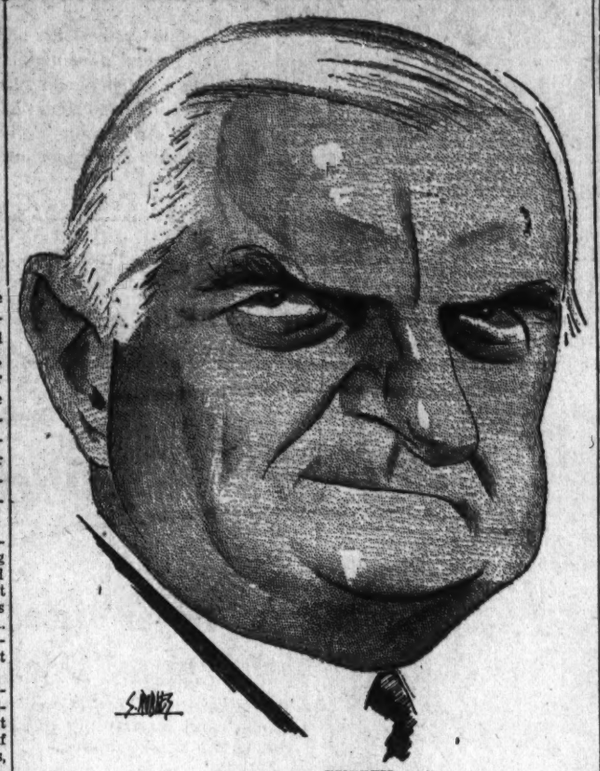
New Faces in the Senate — — Pennsylvania's Mr. Guffey

Hard-Boiled Analyst Who Sees Actions as Results.

This is the sixth of a series of sketches of the newly elected Senators, written by competent observers. Another will appear in this space tomorrow.

By Raymond Z. Henle.
(Washington Correspondent, Pittsburgh Post-Gazette).



JOSEPH F. GUFFEY.

TO THE place of power once held by such Republican Goliaths as Penrose, Quay and Knox, now comes Joseph F. Guffey, first Democrat elected to wear Pennsylvania's Senatorial purple since 1875. And just as those Republicans held their own party organization in the hollow of their hands, so Guffey comes to the Senate undisputed boss of Pennsylvania's reanimated Democrats.

He has scaled the political escalator by the back door, pushing aside less aggressive aspirants and unlucky guessers. The ascent at times has been rough, but, unlike his immediate predecessor, David A. Reed, he has had the talent to discern the winds of public sentiment and adjust his sails accordingly.

A hard-boiled analyst, measuring action in terms of results, Guffey never has permitted sentiment to interfere with his conception of politics as a practical game. Thus, it was no surprise to find him deserting his one-time friend, Al Smith, to support Franklin D. Roosevelt for President in 1932.

Nor was it a mystery to Pennsylvanians when men like A. Mitchell Palmer, Royland S. Morris and Bruce F. Sterling, all prominent associates of Guffey in the Wilson Administration, declined to support their one-time comrade in his recent campaign.

In that campaign Guffey had to listen to charges that of all the prominent men with whom he had campaigned in the past, few were standng by him now. But Guffey did not even answer the charge. He only drew closer to his new politcal godfather, Franklin Roosevelt, and passed the New Deal dissenters haughtily by.

• • • •

FRIENDS of Mr. Guffey will tell you it is because of his capacity to forget political friendships when they raise the hurdle of public sentiment that the Democratic party has attained its current puissance in Pennsylvania. They say hard-boiled politics is the only kind of politics that makes headway in the Keystone State.

So if it is true that Pennsylvania's Democrats needed autocratic, energetic leadership compounded without sentiment, they got, in Mr. Guffey, just what the doctor ordered.

A "before-Chicago Roosevelt man," he became the favorite of the Farley patronage machine in the Keystone State. Long before inauguration Guffey had established a Washington office and a force of secretaries. He went to his business with the directness of a trained corporation executive.

Those 18 months between inauguration and election had been used practically if not too wisely in all instances. Senator Reed charged in the campaign that the home loan system in Pennsylvania, for example, was inefficient and corrupt, making loans in some counties only to those who came with indorsements from the county Democratic leader, a charge which has recently been repeated in part by a complaining delegation of building and loan association executives.

But in the main, Guffey made a splendid job of patronage dispensing without calling in friends of other men who were edging in for Democratic political preferment. The Smith-Kistler boys could make no headway against him in the primary and his organization, plus, of course, New Deal sentiment, did the trick in the general election.

• • • •

GUFFEY wears the Democratic label proudly and is an uncompromising New Dealer on the stump. Nevertheless, the steel and coal barons and the rest of Pennsylvania's great industrialists, who so strongly supported Reed, do not seem to fear Reed's Democratic successor. One could go from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh and hear some harsh words spoken against Guffey. But nowhere would you find the radical brush applied.

He is essentially a conservative. He lives in the same fashionable ward in Pittsburgh as does Senator Reed. Like Reed, he went to Princeton. While Reed was a lawyer for great corporations, Guffey has been an executive of them.

His training has been in utilities and oil. He associates with Pittsburgh's millionaires in the Duquesne and Allegheny country clubs. One of his closest friends is M. L. Benedum, so rich that he could be sued for upward of $40,000,000 by the Internal Revenue Bureau. Judge James H. Reed, the Senator's father, was Guffey's close friend, and with the assistance of none other than Andrew W. Mellon once helped Guffey out of a serious financial predicament.

So it is not strange that Pennsylvania's financial industrial giants, though they certainly preferred Reed to Guffey, are sleeping peacefully at night.

• • • •

GUFFEY can claim with justice his right to leadership in the Democratic Party in Pennsylvania. He was born a Democrat, the son of the Democratic leader of Westmoreland County. Through all the lean years, when it seemed that Democrats were destined to become as scarce as Republicans in Alabama, Guffey tried to keep the nucleus of an organization together, ran for office and saw that others kept at least a partial Democratic ticket in the field.

As a young Democrat supporting Cleveland, he was rewarded with a minor position in the Pittsburgh postoffice in 1894 and his interest in the Democratic Party has never waned from that time.

He made a fortune as executive of the Philadelphia Company, a Pennsylvania utility, the Guffey-Gillespie Oil Co., the Atlantic Gulf Oil Co., and the Columbia Syndicate. But an unfortunate experience in politics is counted as having rendered him not a rich man today.

This experience occurred during his emergence upon the national political scene shortly after the opening of the World War. As a dollar-a-year man, he was given a place by President Wilson on the war industries board to conserve the national oil supply. From there he went to the directorship of the Bureau of Sales in the Alien Property Custodian's office.

A few years later, an audit disclosed that approximately $56,000,000 in interest deposited in New York banks by the alien property sales bureau had not been accounted for. Guffey was indicted for embezzlement, but the indictment was nolle prossed eight years later—in 1930. It developed that the money had been returned.

• • • •

FOR some years there had been a great deal of talk in Pennsylvania about this case, but no one seemed to have any authentic information. Then, in the recent campaign, Gifford Pinchot characteristically dropped a bombshell that brought a partial explanation.

Making a variety of attacks on Guffey, Pinchot carried the cry: "I can't stand Guffey," from the Susquehanna to the Ohio. Then, on October 18, he brought forward what he described as "a new reason why I can't stand Guffey." In a speech at Charleroi he declared that Guffey had received some of the money for the appropriation of which he was indicted from former Treasury Secretary Mellon "and two or three Pittsburgh men," now dead.

"Dave Reed is openly the representative of Mellon and the Mellon trusts in the United States Senate . . . but Guffey is Mellon's undercover man," Pinchot cried.

Apparently Mellon thought the charge too serious to ignore, even though made by a man he holds in contempt. Within 24 hours the former Secretary of the Treasury had thrown new light on the Guffey indictment. He announced that he had underwritten one-half of a loan of $150,000 to Guffey to help Guffey out of "a very serious predicament."

Quips and Quiddities, or How Gertrude Stein Has Mark Twain Backed Off the Map.

By Theodore Hall.

MISS GERTRUDE STEIN, I now see, is one of our prime humorists. Monday night she gave a talk over the air, voicing some of the Steinian axioms in a smooth, rather sing-song voice, which was calculated to take in all but the wary.

If you missed that entertaining little quarter hour and now regret it, if you would like to lay eyes on this w. k. expatriate author who has arrived in this country after 30 years in Paris, and if you would enjoy cerebral chuckling at its best, your chance will come on December 27. On that day Miss Stein will arrive in town to deliver a public lecture under the auspices of the Bryn Mawr Club. But be warned that styles in humorous lecturing have changed since the brave days of Artemus Ward and Mark Twain.

All I can do now is to report some of her best bon mots. No spice seems necessary after one remembers that these are very serious things indeed to the Stein cult.

• • • •

"If you enjoy something you understand it," Miss Stein declared, "and if you understand it you enjoy it." Burnt toast is no great puzzle, nor are Eddie Guest's poems, either; so, of course, we must love both.

"Capital letters and question marks are useless hangovers from the days when people didn't read very well. They're not needed now."

"Nouns are practically dead and adjectives even more so. Adverbs and conjunctions are most alive."

"'And how' is the livest expression in our language."

"You can't tell about a young writer until all his work is in." Well, of course, you can't tell about all his work until it's all in and, of course, you can tell about any one work or you can't tell anything. I admit, though, that this one is a bit swift for me.

• • • •

Perhaps I'd better explain that Miss Stein's radio talk was done in interview form, with a Mr. Wendell asking questions and performing as an A-1 stooge. He followed the last quip with a query as to how books could be judged, then.

Miss Stein was all ready. "The function of a book reviewer is to review books and they do."

One of her audience, at least, nearly rolled out of his chair at that.

"How," persevered Mr. Wendell, "did you come to write that poem on pigeons?"

"I went out and saw some pigeons on the grass and I came back and sat in the garden and began to write: 'Pigeons in the grass, alas pigeons in the grass, alas, alas——'" (Ed. note: This went on for some time, like the vaudeville girl who shows you she can turn two cart wheels by turning 47. A sure-fire act). Then said Miss Stein: "I talked and talked and talked and talked until the emotion was out—that's what writers do."

"Now that bit in your prose portrait of Carl Van Vechten," went on Mr. Wendell, doing a fine job.

Miss Stein had it before her. "'Tied and untied and that is all there is to it. And as tied and as beside, and as beside and tied,'" she read. "Sure!" she burst out, "The words look like Carl Van Vechten—anyone can see that."

Then the roof came down.

"What you like you understand," she added, "and what you understand you like."

"I think I understand," said Mr. Wendel, albeit a trifle feebly.

• • • •

For collateral reading, I've so far forgot to mention, Random House has just made a very handsome volume out of Miss Stein's collected prose portraits of her friends and acquaintances—"Portraits and Prayers" ($2.50). Picasso and Hemingway, Matisse and Mildred Aldrich and Mabel Dodge are all here, made into something rich and strange.

• • • •

But Miss Stein bettered her best with her last remark on Monday. She was speaking of her writing. "If you did not enjoy it," and even a famous wit allows a smile to occur now and then, "why did you make a fuss about it—there's the answer!"

Fuss? Where is the fuss? I thought it was just one long rippling chuckle of appreciation when a consensus of our ablest and most serious men (Carl Van Vechten, and someone else who's slipped my mind just now) declared that Miss Stein's work is the foundation of modern English prose.

Locke's "Best"

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

WILLIAM JOHN LOCKE was born in 1863 and died in 1930. Born of English parents at Trinidad, in the Barbados, he went to England at the age of 18, entered St. John's College, Cambridge, and took honors in mathematics. His vacations were spent in the art quarter at Paris; and it is rather curious, when his chief interests were in art and letters, that he not only specialized in mathematics, but attained distinction.

He loved France, French literature and the French people; in his later years his home was in southern France.

• • • •

He taught mathematics for awhile in a secondary school; and in the first novel that made his reputation he has the hero say, "I earned my living at school-slavery, teaching children the most useless, the most disastrous, the most soul-cramping brand of knowledge wherewith pedagogues in their insensate folly have crippled the minds and blasted the lives of thousands of their fellow-creatures."

He began writing novels in the nineties; but it was not until about the year 1907 that he wrote four novels which were a revelation to the English-speaking world. These were "The Morals of Marcus," "The Beloved Vagabond," "Septimus" and "Simon the Jester." These had a combination of plot, characterization and marvelous humor that endeared their author to hundreds of thousands. After these great successes, he wrote novels steadily all the rest of his life, but never recaptured the charm of those I have mentioned.

• • • •

It is hard to say which novel of Locke's is the best; but my vote is for "Septimus," one of the most whimsical, most humorous, most lovable novels I ever read. In this book he made two heroes out of almost impossible material. One of them is a loud-mouthed, vulgar, obstreperous back-slapping patent-medicine advertiser. The other, Septimus himself, is a harmless nincompoop, as audacious as a wounded rabbit. Yet both are heroes; and, by the author's sympathy, we have for them sincere reverence.

"Septimus" is the only novel I was unable to read on a railway train. One day, between Bridgeport and New Haven, I was reading it to myself in peace when suddenly I shocked the passengers and amazed myself by roaring aloud with uncontrollable laughter. Ha! Ha! Ha! I shouted with mirth. Every one in the car thought I was crazy, and they were right. I was crazy with mirth. It is one of the funniest novels I ever read.

Mathematics did not spoil Mr. Locke's idealism. He said, "I would rather give up clean linen and tobacco than give up my dreams."

Eccles Seems Victim Of Hasty Conclusion

Tagged as Spender But Actually Seeks Orthodox Goal of Credit Expansion.

By Elliott Thurston.

PROPHETS of disaster are able to discover calamities where those whom they have currently called wishful thinkers (sic) perceive, or think they perceive, salvation. Thus the appointment of Marriner S. Eccles as governor of the Federal Reserve Board is inducing gloomy forebodings among spokesmen for the everything-is-lost school, while the adherents to the there-is-still-hope school see nothing very horrifying about Mr. Eccles.

The difficulty seems to arise not merely from differences in digestion of psychopathology (which may be the same thing) but from the persisting confusions resulting from the casual use of phrases. Mr. Eccles was unhappily advertised to the country, in most of the comments upon his appointment, as "an ardent recovery-by-spending advocate." This superficial tag on him was enough to terrify already jittery orthodoxy. And it did.

However, as Mr. Bernard Kilgore notes in the quite canonical Wall Street Journal, Mr. Eccles favors a particular kind of Government spending. "He wants the Government to borrow and lend and spend in such a way," says this commentator, "as to induce the greatest amount of private borrowing, private lending and private spending.

"In other words, it seems perfectly clear that Mr. Eccles sees the vast potentialities that exist in the credit-making machine and he understands why the printing press is not the solution of the deflation problem."

• • • •

SURELY this should be a matter for rejoicing instead of repining. Certainly it is one thing for the Government to spend greenbacks and a rather different thing for private citizens to use bank credit. The trouble has been getting private citizens to utilize the enormous, potentially unprecedented, supplies of bank credit which for some time have been waiting, even begging, to be used.

The chief argument between Mr. Jesse Jones and the bankers, for instance, has not been the desirability of using the credit, but who is to blame because it isn't being used. Until lately, at least, Mr. Jones appeared to be under the impression that the bankers were at fault. The bankers were fully as convinced that the trouble was with the Government and all the real or imagined hobgoblins conjured out of the New Deal to scare off the borrowers.

Any way, no voice has yet been raised among the orthodox or the heterodox to question the utter desirability of getting some of this bank credit into circulation. And it seems strange that because Mr. Eccles is for the same thing, and for things that will induce it—even Government lending and spending—he should take on such a fearsome aspect. One would suppose, offhand, that great sighs of relief would go up from the jittery leaguers because a man who understands excess reserves, for example, was selected for the governorship instead of any one of several hundred congressional devotees of greenbackism.

THE real danger, it would seem, is not that Mr. Eccles is deluded by monetary black magic, but that he may prove unable to apply the brakes if this bank credit gets to moving so fast and furiously as to dwarf the excesses of 1929. The danger is that the sensation would be so pleasant for practically everybody concerned that political appointees, even more than bankers, would lack the chararter and courage to keep the country from taking a ruinous overdose. Yet it may be a matter of some encouragement that Mr. Eccles appears to be aware of the perils even though he may be unable to prevent them. At the moment almost everybody would be glad to be brought a little nearer to this particular kind of peril. The country could stand quite a dose of danger from credit expansion.

There are, to be sure, New Dealers who believe the country can spend its way to prosperity, who are totally unconcerned about where the money comes from, whether out of the printing press or the bank, or both. However, Mr. Eccles is not of that group and would not have been chosen for his present large responsibility if he had been.

Nobody can guarantee what Mr. Eccles or anybody else may think tomorrow. But on the basis of what Mr. Eccles is believed by his colleagues and by the President to think today, there seems to be no reason for the new onset of chills and fever now being suffered by those who probably have been misled by another instance of misbranding.

politan unit of Joseph D. Kaufman was $19,765.45, making 24.03 per cent of its quota. New calculations revealed that the following were the average gifts in the four units: Special gifts, $1,200; metropolitan, $22.12; group, $11.03, and governmental, $8.41.

47,026 Contribute.

The total number of donors so far in the drive is 47,026, or approximately one-third of those expected before the end of the drive.

Speaking at the Willard Hotel luncheon report meeting was Sanford Bates, United States director of prisons and president of the Washington Council of Social Agencies.

Mr. Bates told the workers that the help of the Chest agencies in building character is needed more than ever because of the Federal relief program.

Ahead of Last Year.

The amount reported yesterday put the Chest well ahead of last year's record when the end of the third day found only 27.9 per cent of the quota reached.

Officials are praising the work of Maj. Gen. Coleman's division. Pledges through this unit are swamping the auditors and, as the general said yesterday, "My army is running ahead of me."

Many more groups were added to the previously reported "100 or over per centers." Forty of these were divisions of the governmental unit.

Tennessee Railroad Not in Default to U. S.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation yesterday said it had incorrectly included the Tennessee Central Railroad in a recent list of roads in default to the corporation.

The list was made public by Chairman Jesse W. Jones, with an announcement that he was going to study the financial position of railroad borrowers from the RFC. The Tennessee Central is not in default to the corporation.

County Seeks Help of State For New Road

Frederick Asks Highway Commission to Act With W. Va.

Winchester, Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—A resolution asking the State Highway Commission to endeavor to reach an agreement with West Virginia authorities as to the location of the road which will cross the State line somewhere in the vicinity of Howards Chaped has been approved by the Frederick County Board of Supervisors.

The proposed highway is to follow a route by way of Siler, crossing Route No. 822 near the Bloomery grade, thence to Bloomery Gap and on to the fest Virginia line. It will connect with highways of West Virginia at either end. Information here is that West Virginia may allocate funds available for the route to some other project unless the location is made at an early date.

Another highway problem was presented at the meeting of supervisors by a committee from Gainesboro district in the form of resolutions adopted at a mass meeting held Saturday at Cross Junction. The resolutions asked that the board recommend to the highway department allocation of funds for construction of the North Frederick road, Route 7.

The need for the improvement is urgent, the petitioners pointed out, since the road serves a section of Frederick County which produces a great volume of farm products, including apples. The road also serves as a link in various trunk routes from Cumberland and other cities, which converge in Winchester.

Fraternity to Honor Eric Dawson Tonight

Roper, Secretary of Commerce; Gen. B. F. Cheatham, retired, in charge of the restoration of Stratford, and Gen. J. C. Breckenridge, Marine commandant at Quantico.

Mr. Dawson, formerly professor of romance languages at the University of Mississippi and the University of Illinois, and attached to the American peace mission at Versailles, is stopping with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parsons Ervin.

Fewer Are Arrested For Drunken Driving

Richmond, Va., Nov. 14 (AP).—Local police records today showed a drop from 42 in September to 26 in October in the number of arrests for drunken driving. The monthly average for the entire time back to 1928 has been 22 and the high year was 1930, when there were 328 bookings on this charge.

Police said their attitude toward enforcement of the law against driving while intoxicated has not changed and that all offenders observed are being arrested.

W. A. Cushing Rites Held.

New Market, Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—Funeral services for W. A. Cushing, 74, former station operator for the Chesapeake & Ohio and Southern Railway companies, were conducted today at Cedar Grove Church of the Brethren by the Rev. M. L. Huffman. Burial was in the church cemetery. Mr. Cushing was a native of Boston, and came to this vicinity about 12 years ago.

Like the odor of a gas spreads through a room even though the air in that room is still, gold in its solid state will spread through an equally solid piece of lead when the two metals are brought in contact with each other.

The rate of intermingling, called diffusion, is much less rapid with the solids than it is with gases or liquids, but it occurs, nevertheless. Experiments undertaken to show the rate of diffusion of gold and lead at ordinary temperatures showed that after four years in contact with each other gold had spread into the lead a distance of seven millimeters. As gold and lead do not react with each other chemically, the traces of gold found inside the lead block were not changed.

Another proof of the diffusion of solids is based on chemical reaction, however. When solid barium sulphate and solid sodium carbonate are placed in contact they react chemically, proving that molecules of the two solids intermingle, otherwise no reaction would take place.

Fireman Jailed For False Alarm

Richmond Employe Says He Was Chasing Culprit.

Richmond, Nov. 14 (AP).—Charged with turning in a false fire alarm, Claude Outland, 44, a city fireman for 15 years, was sentenced to serve three months in jail in police court today.

His wife became hysterical when the sentence was announced, and was led screaming from the room.

Two policemen testified they caught Outland as he ran across a field after turning in the false alarm. Outland told his battalion chief he saw some one tamper with the alarm box and then flee. He testified he was chasing this man when the officers arrested him.

Road Project Aid Denied.

Chambersburg, Pa., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—The Franklin County Commissioners today decided not to join with the State highway department in the proposed widening of the Lincoln highway through Fayetteville. Had the county concurred in the plan, as proposed by the department, the county would have been liable for all property damage incurred by the project.

Beaten Democrat Will Ask Recount

Unofficial Total Reveals Dixon Lost by 206.

Keyser, W. Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—George G. Dixon, Piedmont, candidate for State Senator from this district on the Democratic ticket, will demand a recount of the votes cast on November 6 as soon as the canvass of the ballots is completed by the county courts of the five counties in the district. Senator E. Bunker Reynolds, Keyser, candidate on the Republican ticket, defeated Mr. Dixon on unofficial returns by a majority of 206.

Mr. Dixon's decision for a recount was made at a meeting with the chairman of the Democratic executive committees of the five counties in the district, members of the district senatorial committee and attorneys from the five counties who will be present at the recount to protect Mr. Dixon's interests.

The usual Republican majority in the district was 7,000. The total unofficial returns now published show Reynolds, 13,232, and Dixon, 13,026. A mistake of 100 votes in one Hardy County precinct cut that much from the Reynolds count. The majority now held by Senator Reynolds is about one vote to a precinct.

Council Power Over New Deal Is Broadened

Roosevelt Acts to Place Coordinating Units Under Richberg.

HOLC and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Chester C. Davis, administrator of the AAA.

George N. Peek, president of the Export-Import Bank.

Lynn P. Talley, president of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Leo T. Crowley, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the RFC.

Marriner S. Eccles, governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

James A. Moffett, Federal Housing administrator.

Coordinators Coordinated.

Conceding smilingly that the number of coordinating agencies has grown to the point where the White House has considerable difficulty in keeping up with them, Mr. Roosevelt said it had been decided at Tuesday's meeting of the Emergency Council to make them sub-committees of the council. It was a case of coordinating the coordinators.

Accordingly, the chairmen of the interdepartmental committees henceforth will make their reports to the council, which is headed by the top coordinator of them all—Donald R. Richberg. Besides the new loan committee, the interdepartmental group working on a merchant marine policy will be brought under the council, and there will be others, Mr. Roosevelt said.

The committee linking the financial agencies of the New Deal was explained as an attempt to prevent duplication of effort and lost motion. From the Treasury, however, came a further explanation that the formation of the new group will help that branch of the Government by furnishing up-to-date information on the amount of money the various agencies might require.

Liquidation Move Seen.

While this was suggested as an aid to the Treasury by guiding it in its borrowing operations, larger significance was attached to the loan committee in other quarters. These sources interpreted the President's move as the prelude to gradual liquidation or consolidation of at least some of the units.

By announcing it will receive no more applications for loans, the HOLC has put itself in the doubtful class. In reply to questions at his press conference, Mr. Roosevelt said applications now on file will exhaust the $3,000,000,000 resources of the HOLC. But whether more funds will be sought for this activity, or whether the HOLC will be allowed to die a natural death, he said, will not be determined until the first of the year.

Eastman Fixes 4-Ply Program

Reorganization of ICC and Extension of Power Proposed.

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—Reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission and a four-point basis of fundamental transportation principles were advocated today by Joseph D. Eastman, coordinator of railroads, in a speech to the National Industrial Traffic League, the largest shipper's organization in the country.

"Without disturbing the commission essentially," he said, "it can be expanded and reorganized. Extension of the I. C. C. jurisdiction over other forms of transportation will enable it to perform its work more effectively and efficiently and at the same time give assurance to the different transportation agencies that there will be a considerable degree of specialization in the treatment of their problems."

His four points were:

1. The country ought to have the best and cheapest means of transportation.

2. The country ought to be protected against unnecessary duplication or waste in transportation whether by older or newer agencies.

3. The country ought to have at all times safe, convenient and efficient service by reliable and responsible operators.

4. The rates charged for transportation ought to be known dependable and reasonable and relatively fair to all shippers, places and localities, whether they be big or little.

Coin Expert Asks Roosevelt's Help

Complains of Indictment for Possessing Gold.

Utica, N. Y., Nov. 14 (AP).—Saluting President Roosevelt as "Dear President and fellow coin collector," Nathan Sonne today had a letter on the way to the Nation's Chief Executive carrying a protest against the action of a Federal grand jury which indicted him and his two brothers, Otto and Philip Sonne, for possessing gold coins.

Nathan identified himself as "a coin and stamp collector for a number of years, both in the American Numismatic as well as a life member in the American Philatelic Association." He inclosed newspaper clippings about the indictment and mentioned his embarrassment.

The collection was seized, he wrote, by "a United States Secret Service agent by the name of W. A. Karp" on September 4.

"Naturally, I am at a loss to know what to do. I would appreciate, Mr. President, if you will see that I not only get these coins back, but a statement is made for the local newspapers informing the people of Utica that an error has been made. A reply to this letter will be greatly appreciated."

Long Sees Bills Through House To Senate Door

Two-Year Debt Recess Passes; Delay Asked to Read Measures.

Baton Rouge, La., Nov. 14 (AP).—As Senator Huey P. Long sat smiling from the speaker's dais at the powerless opposition, his private debt moratorium bill and other measures were pushed through the Louisiana House of Representatives late today and speeded to the Senate.

Although a small minority delayed action on the Long program for four hours, the measure to suspend debts for two years upon a "reprieve" from the State bank commissioner was passed, 89 to 0.

Long wanted the House to adopt finally all his power-propelling bills at a morning session and send them to the Senate, but some of the representatives asked for time to read the bills before voting on them.

Second Special Session.

The 44 bills of the Kingfish dictatorship were introduced Monday night at the opening of Gov. O. K. Allen's second special session of the year. They were approved on sight yesterday by the House ways and means committee and referred last night to the House.

The Legislature is expected to end early Friday, completing its legislation for the Kingfish administration in another of the record special sessions in which Long has enacted into law the satutes that give him dictatorial authority throughout the Sate.

The bills create a civil service commission composed of Administration leaders, postpone local elections until newly qualified voters can take part, revise boards that control the police and fire departments and other big city employment agencies to permit the Governor to appoint a majority of the members, and create a new State Bar Association whose board is elected by the people instead of by the present State Bar Association.

Utility Authority.

In addition, the proposed laws will give the State public service commission authority to regulate public utilities which now are responsible to the municipal councils.

This was considered Long's plan to reduce electric rates in New Orleans where the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., contracts with the commission council and has the right of appeal in the Federal Court.

In the last election the Long and Allen administration gained the majority vote on the public service commission by election of the Long candidate, James O'Connor, who defeated Francis Williams, bitter foe of Long and his policies.

Father Biever Dead at Loyola

Celebrated Jesuit Founded the University With a Historic Dime.

New Orleans, Nov. 14 (AP).—The Rev. Albert Biever, S. J., 76-year-old founder of Loyola University of the South and pastor of the Church of the Holy Name Jesus, died suddenly today from a heart attack at the Jesuit residence adjacent to the university.

He served as president of the university for ten years and was widely known in ecclesiastical, church administrative and scientific circles.

With a gentle smile, Father Biever once said, "they gave me 10 cents carfare and told me to go uptown and found a university."

Father Biever started out with the historic dime from the old Jesuit church in downtown Baronne street and the answer was the rise of the Catholic university on upper St. Charles avenue in 1904.

The noted priest was born in the Duchy of Luxembourg in 1858.

He came to Louisiana in 1875 at the age of 17 and landed in New Orleans just after the overthrow of the carpetbag reign.

He served his novitiate at St. Charles College, Grand Coteau, La., and then taught six years at Spring Hill College, Mobile, Ala. He was ordained in 1889.

Later Father Biever taught at Macon, Spring Hill, Mobile, Galveston, Montreal, Canada, and West Palm Beach, Fla. In 1897 he was recalled to New Orleans to help in the fight against the yellow fever epidemic.

In 1920 he was named pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception. The historic building was condemned as unsafe for worship and he raised funds and had the church rebuilt as one of the proudest religious monuments in New Orleans.

New-Type Freight Car Put on Display Here

A new pressed steel freight car with a light weight of 30,000 pounds and a load limit of 139,000 pounds, something altogether new in railroading, went on exhibition at Union Station yesterday.

The car is made of cor-ten steel and almost exclusively constructed of plates and pressings, in which the corrosion resisting quality of the steel has been emphasized. It may be seen on track 42 of the station and will remain there until tomorrow

Dam Held Up, Arizona Calls Its Army Home

Moeur's Order to Retreat Prevents "Navy" From "Seeing Action."

Phoenix, Ariz., Nov. 14 (AP).—National Guard machine gunners, riflemen and "observers" were recalled from Arizona's "western front" today.

Gov. B. B. Moeur ordered the troops back to Prescott and Phoenix in view of the United States Bureau of Reclamation's stoppage of construction work in Arizona territory at Parker Dam site, pending determination of the respective rights of interested States.

The guardsmen, ordered to "repel a threatened invasion" of Arizona and prevent construction of a temporary bridge across the Colorado River from California, were but 18 miles from the scene when halted yesterday by the Governor.

Moeur's order obviated the necessity of bringing Arizona's two-boat "navy" into action to transport the 101 guardsmen 18 miles up the river from Parker to the dam site.

"If they had granted us only two more days," said J. Perry Yates, resident engineer in charge of construction, "we would have had the bridge completed and the troops could have used it to reach the martial-law zone."

The stop order involved only activities on the Arizona side. Construction work on the California side continued, and Yates said it could go on for perhaps a month more without serious handicap. He said unless the controversy were settled by that time it might be necessary to suspend the $12,000,000 project.

Battle Isn't Over, Declares Chavez

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Nov. 14 (AP).—Representative Dennis Chavez (Democrat) today said "the battle isn't over—yet," but declined to state whether he would contest the November 6 election vote which, on the basis of nearly complete returns today, gave Senator Bronson Cutting (Republican) a majority of 1,193 for reelection.

In Washington, the Senate campaign funds committee agreed to await Chavez's decision before making an inquiry into the New Mexico situation.

"We haven't decided what action will be taken," Chavez said. "But it can be said that the battle isn't over yet."

With official returns from 26 of the State's 31 counties and unofficial returns from the remainder, lacking only a few absentee votes, the race stood:

Cutting 76,112; Chavez, 74,919.

Army and Navy Disclose Plans To Add Planes

Air Corps Asks 800 New Craft; Construction of Airship Planned.

(Associated Press.)

An expanded American air defense program took form yesterday as the Army Air Corps submitted budget requests for 800 new airplanes and the Navy disclosed that it was considering construction of a new, but small, airship.

If approved, the Air Corps' plan would give the United States the largest and most up-to-date military aerial armada in the world. It envisages eventual acquisition of 2,400 new airplanes, 800 in the 1936 fiscal year.

At the same time there were indications that the War Department wanted budget approval of $20,000,000 for mechanization and modernization of Army equipment and $11,000,000 for antiaircraft material to equip fully air defense regiments in the United States, Hawaii, Panama and the Philippines.

Need for Replacements.

Of the Army's 800 new planes, around 500 would be required annually to replace obsolescent or worn-out ships. The remaining 300 would be the actual increase. Spreading purchases over three years, as the Air Corps plans, would give the Army 2,000 planes of all types against the present 1,400 fit for actual war-time use.

All 2,400 would cost around $100,000,000 with estimates placing the outlay for the first year's program at about $36,000,000. The high unit cost of approximately $45,000 was used in the figuring because of a preponderance of combat planes which would have to be fully equipped with armament, radio and night flying devices.

In the Navy, there was the usual division of opinion over the merit of aircraft. The Bureau of Aeronautics wanted a big airship to replace the Akron. The general board, so far, had failed to approve such a craft, limiting its recommendation to construction of a small dirigible for training.

Training Ship.

Of about 2,500,000 cubic feet capacity, the training ship would be only slightly larger than the condemned Los Angeles and less than half the size of the Macon, the Navy's only active airship.

At the same time Secretary Swanson disclosed at a press conference that the Navy was prepared to speed up its treaty-strength construction program as much as 50 per cent should it become necessary.

Observers attached appreciable significance to the statement in view of negotiations now under way in London between spokesmen of the United States, Great Britain and Japan preparatory to a general naval conference in 1935.

Secretary's Opinion.

More airplanes, surface ships and men were held by the Secretary to be of greater importance than replacing the Akron, sister ship of the Macon, which was destroyed at sea last year.

The suggested training airship probably would cost $3,000,000 to $4,000,000. Swanson asserted. The Macon cost only $2,450,000.

Swanson said the Navy might send the Macon to Hawaii as part of fleet maneuvers next summer in the Hawaii-Alaska-Puget Sound area.

Asked whether Japanese reaction would have any influence on a possible trip of this kind, the Secretary declared:

"All of our maneuvers and our building program are irrespective of that."

Swanson said the Navy had asked $1,800,000 to continue improvements at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, which will be one of the strategic points in next year's fleet operations. Additional dredging and work on sea walls is required.

De Onate Is Coy As Cameras Click On Bridal Boat

Baltimore, Nov. 14 (AP).—It was Rafael Lopez de Onate, the movie actor, and not his bride, the former Ellen Wilson McAdoo, who was camera shy when photographers crowded about them on the deck of the steamer City of Baltimore today to see them off to a honeymoon in Europe.

The couple arrived from Washington shortly before sailing time and hurried to their stateroom, refusing all requests to pose for cameras.

Persistent pleas finally brought consent and they agreed to face the photographers "but for only a minute or two."

Mr. and Mrs. de Onate were indefinite about their plans. They will dock at Hamburg, but from there they didn't know where they were going. Neither anticipated any trouble over their marriage. That, they said, was "all settled" when Senator McAdoo and his divorced wife withdrew their opposition.

"Mama," whispered little Willie as the great conductor took his place in the orchestra pit, and the famous soprano began her aria, "what's the man shaking the stick at her for?"

"Keep quiet!" threatened Mama. "That's his baton. He isn't shaking it at her."

"Then what's she hollerin' for?"

That, we are sad to report, is little Willie's reaction to good music. The case of his sister is worse. She just loves to prattle about how much she adores good music, but when she gets an opportunity to listen to a symphony, she stays home and tunes the radio to Cab Calloway's band, and she thinks that arpeggio is an island in the Pacific and that Chaikovski was a Russian general. You see, little Willie and his sister have not read the excellent articles by Ray C. B. Brown in The Washington Post; and, therefore, are not en rapport with things musical . . . but there is hope for them even now, and we are starting a subscription to The Post for them in order that they may learn the intellectual pleasure to be derived from listening to classical music.

Mr. Brown is one of America's best known music critics, and his authoritative, intelligent, sensitive articles are required reading for music lovers. Washington is becoming more and more music conscious, and The Post is proud of the part Mr. Brown has played in explaining the works of great composers to new listeners. For two years, Mr. Brown was managing editor of "Musical America" and his writings are studied closely by students. In his "Postlude" column, which discusses programs presented by symphony orchestras, choral groups and others, he strikes a new note in criticism.

Like his good friend, Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, the "tune detector," Mr. Brown can listen to Tin Pan Alley's latest song hit and tell you instantly the symphony from which the theme was stolen, and if you question him closely, he might remember the older work from which the symphony composer borrowed a few bars!

In The Sunday Post, you'll find an entire page devoted to music, and the leading article, always written by Mr. Brown, will give you a deeper, more sympathetic understanding of all things musical.

Nowadays, when Stravinski's "Firebird Suite" is discussed at the dinner table along with the New Deal and "Anthony Adverse," you'll find Ray C. B. Brown's brilliant articles of great help in convincing your hostess that you, too, can recognize Bloch's "Schelomo" and can discuss Hindemith with the best of them. If you are a lover of good music, you'll appreciate his clear, authentic criticisms; if you are just learning to listen to the great symphonies, you'll demand his help. You'll find it in

Capt. Casardi Is Honored At Luncheon

Italian Naval Attache to Leave Capital in Fortnight.

Embassy Set Members Hosts at Farewell Party.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The Italian Embassy is causing consternation in Capital society these days with so many changes in the personnel of the staff, every member of which is popular.

Of course the Ambassador, Signor Augusto Rosso, the popular bachelor is remaining, but other members of the staff are being shifted with such rapidity that it is difficult to account for their whereabouts.

First to leave was Lieut. Col. Marco Pennaroli, for four years military attache, and honorary aide de camp to the King, who left last summer to rejoin his troops in Italy. Col. Pennaroli has not been replaced, and it is hoped that as soon as he has been on duty with the troops for the required amount of time, and is made a full colonel, he will return to resume his post, for it takes a military attache several years to acquaint himself with the service people here as well as with military affairs, and just about the time he has made himself proficient in his duties it is time for him to be transferred.

Capt. Casardi Feted.

Then the Naval Attache, Capt. Ferdinand Casardi, is on the eve, figuratively speaking, of leaving for Italy for sea duty. Signora Casardi left this country early in the autumn to be with her young son for a short time before he returned to the Italian naval academy for the winter, and Capt. Casardi will sail in a fortnight to join her. Yesterday Capt. Casardi was given a farewell luncheon at the Mayflower by the naval attaches and assistant naval attaches of the various embassies here. The company included Capt. John T. G. Stapler, U. S. N.; Capt. A. R. Dewar, of the British Embassy; Comdr. Guillermo B. McKinley, of the Argentine Embassy; Capt. Louis Sable, of the French Embassy; Capt. Robert Witthoeft, of the German Embassy; Mr. Paul Oras and Mr. Alexander M. Yakimishef, of the Soviet Embassy; Capt. Tamon Yamaguchi and Lieut. Comdr. Eiitiroo Zyoo, of the Japanese Embassy.

The departure of Signora Casardi left only four ladies in the ranks of the Italian Embassy, the Marchioness Rossi-Longhi, wife of the counselor; Signora Sbernadori, wife of the air attache; Signora Bonardelli, wife of the counselor for emigration, and Signora Angelone, wife of the commercial attache. And these ranks will soon be reduced to three, for the popular Commander and Signora Sbernadori have received orders to return to Italy. Their departure will be a serious loss to members of the younger diplomatic set, for this couple has been outstandingly popular in diplomatic circles, as well as with members of the service and resident society. Although no date has been set for their departure, it is anticipated in the near future, with regret.

"Bal Masque" Recalled.

There has been a good deal of moving about in the house of the three bachelor secretaries, Signors Migone, Tommasi and Ferrero, all of whom will stand out in the minds of Washingtonians for a long time, if for no other reason than the brilliant "Bal Masque" which they gave in the embassy last spring. Signor Ferrero left last summer for a sojourn in Italy, and will sail tomorrow to return to this country. In the meantime, Signor Tommasi and Signor Migone "kept house" in the residence they leased in Cleveland Park early last summer.

Signor Migone sailed last Saturday for a vacation in his homeland, leaving Signor Tommasi alone. But within the next ten days, tall young Signor Ferrero will return.

There are many here who will remember an erstwhile member of the embassay staff, who is returning the first of next week to spend the winter here. She is Mme. de Beaujeu Domville, the former Signora Luciano Mascia. Mme. Domville has not been here for several years. She has been living with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Domville in Montreal. Mme. Domville, who as "Toto" Mascia, was an amazingly popular person, and although a Canadian, looked very much like Signora Sbernadori, tall, slender and dark. In fact many think she looks much more Italian than her former husband, who by the way was one of the ushers in the wedding of Commendatore Leonardo Vitteti and Miss Natalie Coe. Signor Vitteti and Signor Mascia were attached to the embassy here at the same time, and the latter has not been in Washington since his divorce.

Mme. Domville will take an apartment at the Anchorage temporarily. Recently Mme. Domville has been visiting in California.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

We have another newcomer to the set. Petite Ellen Quinn, who is dark and vivacious, hails from Chicago and is spending some time with her aunt, Mrs. Wendell Merrick.

Bettie Hartz, all in yellow and brown with yellow gloves, was dashing around town yesterday afternoon starting to make plans for her party, which is to be on December 19.

Barbara Baker and Cole McFarlen were dancing and probably punning at the Mayflower the other afternoon. Barbara had on a most attractive ensemble of a grayish-tan crepe. Mary Patterson, also dancing at the Mayflower, had on a velvet frock of golden brown with which she wore a very unusual hat of the same shade, which had a huge brim that turned perkily up on one side and swooped way down on the other.

Walter Whichard is arousing the curiosity of not a few by a new word he dug up somewhere. It sounds like "minate" and seems to be a noun applicable to both friends and strangers. Now just what would that mean?

Capital Store Holds Exhibit Of Chinaware

Samples of Famous Designs by English House Are Shown.

By Katherine Smith.

(During the absence of Miss Ruth Anne Davis, her column is being written by Katherine Smith.)

AN UNUSUAL exhibit of chinaware is featured at a local store. Included are samples of famous designs made during the last 200 years. All by one famous English house, the exhibit is as close to an art display as it could get.

Many pieces were made for royal families, running from $60 to $5,900 a dozen. There are samples of old molds, and copper plates showing the history of the designs.

A representative from the English firm will explain and introduce the wonders of the china. This exhibit will be open tonight until 10 o'clock for the convenience of those who can not attend during the day.

Display of Cosmetics.

Here's another exhibition to attend. It's a display of cosmetics, superintended by a representative of the firm who will tell you exactly how to budget your beautifiers, so that, for 5 or 6 cents a day, you can keep your face young and healthy, much as you keep your body so, by proper dieting.

She draws a parallel between food and beauty budgets, pointing out the "staples" in the cosmetic field, the "necessities" that keep you lovely, the fact that the purchase of cheap cosmetics, like cheap foods, is false economy. Then, too, at certain ages, a variation of the skin diet is required, just as vitamin A is needed in certain stages of physical development. Climatic seasons affect the cosmetic rules; individual skin conditions require individual treatments.

This representative will be glad to give you an individual beauty budget upon request.

Coiffure Exhibition.

And still another exhibition. This time it's on hair, with a display of coiffure fashions, explained by a famous London expert. He arrives today, so watch for announcements of the exact date he'll appear.

Cream-Making Gadget.

Here's the latest—and will the contented cows be mad!—a gadget that will make cream for 5 cents a half pint. And that's no joke, either, 2 ounces of butter plus 8 ounces of milk will make 10 ounces of cream. When you consider the cost of real cream, as compared to milk and butter—figure it out for yourself.

The cream-maker is a little aluminum fixture. You pour your melted butter and milk into the bowl, pump a handle up and down a few times and the cream comes out a spout in the bottom. The cream is made through an emulsion and pressure process. It isn't extraordinary, because cream is milk and butter combined, anyway. You can use either sweet or salted butter, because the machine will desalt the butter for you while the cream is being made.

Display and demonstrators show you all about it. The fun starts today.

Tasseled Silk Cords.

Nothing smarter to dress up a dress of negligee than a tasseled silk cord. You can get them in all colors and gold for $1.29. They're particularly versatile, too, make last year's evening dress look like new and add smartness to the afternoon frock.

Monogrammed Cards.

If you have a friend who's a bridge fiend (or even a haphazard player), why not give him a set of monogrammed cards for Christmas? You can get two packs, linen finish, in varied colors, with the initials in gold for $1.

Antique Chinese Bottles.

Many people have a bottle hobby. Are you one of those? If so, there are some lovely antique Chinese bottles from which to choose. The workmanship is beautiful, dragons, birds, flowers and animals crawl or climb up the sides.

You can use them for perfume or for general decoration.

Belt and Buckle.

Here's another good gift for a man. A belt and buckle set, all done up in an attractive box and for only $2.95. The belt is cowhide, the buckle sterling silver and will be engraved with initials free.

You ought to take a look at it. It's a good value.

Compact Cigarette Lighters.

Have you seen those twin compacts and cigarette lighters? They are modernistically striped in colors and silver. There are a variety of colors, so you may match your bag, dress or other accessory. Only $1.

Latest Gadget for Desk.

Latest and most useful gadget for the desk—a brass ruler. In the middle, a black Scottie dog keeps guard, and out of the back of his neck sticks a little pencil. The idea is, when you have the ruler, you'll always have a pencil handy. Ditto a paper weight, for the ruler is heavy enough to protect bills from winter breezes.

Call Katherine Smith, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 105, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

50-Year-Old Wedding Cake Prized Possession of D. C. Grandmother

Mrs. Moody Has Had Dainty Ever Since Her Wedding Day.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

MOST PERSONS have decided at some time or other what object they would rescue first if their house caught fire. Mrs. Orrel Moody is no exception. If the big, sun-lit Moody home at 4409 Eighteenth street northwest started going up in smoke, Mrs. Moody would run as fast as her grandmotherly legs could carry her to a cake.

The cake isn't much to look at. It isn't even good to eat. But it's Mrs. Moody's prized possession. For 50 years—ever since it was presented to her on her wedding day—she has treasured it.

"I suppose I'm a sentimental old somebody," she smiled yesterday as she arranged the dark, shrunken oblong with caressing little pats on a tray.

Couldn't Bear to Cut It.

"It doesn't look like much now, does it?" she asked. But her voice betrayed her belief in the cake's undying loveliness.

"When it arrived on our wedding day," she continued, "it was covered with white frosting and rosebuds and forget-me-nots and two doves. It was beautiful. And a surprise, too. We had another cake to serve at the wedding. When this one came from a friend and was so beautiful, I couldn't bear to cut it. I wanted to take it to my new home and show it off there."

When Mrs. Moody, on her bridal day, March 19, 1884, carried the surprise cake from her parents' home in Costello, Pa., to her own new home in a neighboring community, she meant to keep the cake for only a year or two. Gradually the year or two stretched to a lifetime. Two daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Moody. Mr. Moody died. The daughters married, had children of their own. And still the cake lingered on in its tin box.

The doves disappeared years ago. Mrs. Moody doesn't remember for certain what happened to them but she suspects chubby little girls' fingers had something to do with it. Next went the rosebuds and forget-me-nots. And then as the cake shrank with age it left no support for the stiff coat of frosting. The stiff coat cracked and splintered.

The Frosting Quick to Go.

"I expect some of the family used to pick off little pieces of it," Mrs. Moody said. "Seems like I had more trouble with frosting than with the cake. Nobody even hinted at eating the cake after it had gotten a few years old."

Eventually all the frosting vanished. Some of it was absorbed by the cake. But no trace of the once crispy sweet, white stuff is visible today. The top of the flat, heavy oblong is discolored and wrinkled with age and is about half the size it was on that day in March 50 years ago.

The cake was brought to Washington by Mrs. Moody when she came here soon after her husband's death in 1915. Often she has displayed it to friends. When her church, the Hamline Methodist, holds a bazaar November 20 and 21, she will exhibit it there.

"Yes, we're all mighty fond of it," she said as she patted her soft white hair in place and arranged the folds of a wine-colored silk dress. Sometimes I tease my youngest grandchild—she's 13—by saying, 'Oh, I guess I'll give this old dried-out cake to the garbage man.' Say, you ought to hear her carry on.

"She's as proud as she can be of that cake. So are the other two grandchildren. I guess there isn't another cake in the country as old as this one. The old National Museum has asked me for it. But I can't bear to let it go. It's been with me so long."

Now Shrunken With Age, It Has Been Sought by National Museum.

Cheese Made In U. S. Grows In Popularity

Egg and Cheese Timbales and Cake Recipes Recommended.

By Dorothea Duncan.

CHEESE IS a favorite international food. The history of every cheese-producing country is interwoven with fascinating legends of the type of cheese for which it is famous.

One of the most interesting of these legends goes something like this: "Some 10 centuries ago a shepherd tendered his flock on the Cevennes uplands in France. It was his custom to leave his lunch of barley bread and native cheese made of sheep's milk in a cave near the town of Roquefort, to keep it cool until noontime. One day his flocks were wayward and a sudden thunderstorm forced him to drive them to shelter far from the cache where his bread and cheese were concealed.

Some weeks later he passed the cave and thought to look for his abandoned lunch. The barley bread was spoiled, covered with a heavy black mold, but the cheese he found covered with a delicate green mold. He was hungry and nibbled a bit of the cheese. To his surprise it had a delicious flavor which he had never before encountered. The cave, he thought had some magic property, so he determined to try the experiment a second time and left a luncheon of newly-made cheese and barley bread. Upon returning two weeks later he found that the interesting phenomenon had again occurred.

The cheese was interlaced with a filament of green mold, imparting a strangely delicious flavor. His discovery was seized upon by the Conques monks, and, taking the name of the nearest town, Roquefort, it has been such ever since. Nowhere else in Nature but in the cool, damp and drafty air of the Combalva caves is Roquefort cheese possible. It must be made of sheeps' milk. So important is this delicacy that genuine Roquefort cheese is protected with a distinctive Roquefort label, picturing a sheep, to denote its manufacture from sheeps' milk.

These legends have supplied the world with data and technical information about cheese making.

Cheese making has developed as a great industry in the United States, and, like other countries, it has developed a cheese for which it has become famous. This is the soft, white, spready cream cheese, that is sold under different trade names by numerous companies. This cheese has grown immensely in popularity.

Following are some popular cheese recipes.

Cheese Cake.

1 cup zweibach or cracker crumbs
3 tablespoons melted butter or fat
½ teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
¾ cup soft cream cheese or cottage cheese
1-3 cup sugar
2 tablespoons flour
1-3 cup cream
1 egg
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
¼ cup sugar

Roll enough zweibach or crackers to make 1 cup crumbs. Mix with melted butter, sugar and spices. Line small pie plate with this mixture, reserving ½ cup. Beat egg white very stiff, add egg yolk and beat again. Beat cream until stiff and add cheese, vanilla, flour, sugar and egg. Mix gently, turn into pie plate, sprinkle with reserved crumbs and bake in a slow oven (300 degrees Fahr.), until filling is firmly set—about one hour.

How to Keep Well

Home Care of Tuberculosis.

THE recent onslaught on the white plague made by educational forces, physicians and health agencies has borne abundant fruit. Not only has it been demonstrated that tuberculosis can be cured, but it has been shown conclusively that sanitarium treatment is in most instances preferable to home management.

The sanitarium provides daily training of the patient in the type of care that he needs. It centers on him the activities of physicians, nurses and specially trained attendants. It removes the patient from social excitement, worries of the home and constant anxiety about members of the family. Furthermore, in the sanitarium complete control of the patient is possible. In the home the patient sometimes asserts his will power at the expense of his welfare.

Following the lead of a few notable centers in the treatment of the disease, tuberculosis sanitaria have been established in many States and in most of our cities. These care for an aggregate of tens of thousands of cases. Nevertheless there are probably as many, if not more, patients known to be suffering from tuberculosis who are cared for in their homes.

The principles of treatment are the same whether the patient is in a sanitarium or in his home. If home care is undertaken (1) patient and family must adjust themselves to a situation that will last for months or even years; (2) household and business cares must be arranged so that the patient will be freed from all anxiety and responsibility; (3) the patient must have a comfortable room where he can be isolated from the balance of the family; the room should be made as attractive as possible and be well ventilated; (4) intelligent nursing is necessary and published information is available for the patient's family regarding disposal of sputum, sterilization of utensils, care of the bed linen, etc.; (5) children must not be permitted access to the patient's room.

Naturally instructions from the physician will include a general outline of treatment. It is rest, more rest, and complete rest. Instruction will need to be given in the recognition of certain symptoms. Fever, loss of weight and appetite, and nervous irritability are usually evidences of the absorption of toxins incident to the growth of the tubercle bacilli and the destruction of tissue. Absorption is increased by activity and decreased by quiet.

The public is reasonably well informed on the value of a nutritious diet, one that appeals to the patient and includes all varieties of food. Sufficient food should be given to maintain the patient at more than his standard weight.

Even though ideal conditions may be set up in the home, many patients will do better in the long run in a sanitarium. Nevertheless, tuberculosis can be managed in the home with intelligence and with as strict attention to details as is the rule in sanitarium management.

Mary tells Dick her company, Webb & Hoppin, is not satisfied with Tom Gryce, the present advertising man. If he can get the account it will make the future secure for himself and Jocelyn. In her eagerness to help Dick, Mary gives away Gryce's slogan—"It's cheaper to pay more." Not knowing the slogan belongs to some one else, Dick bases his suggested campaign on it. Meanwhile, Jocelyn, on board the Ile de France, is tortured by fears that Dick no longer loves her. Letters entrusted to her care have been stolen by Carrie Franks, Ollie's "pal," and Jocelyn is doing her utmost to get them back.

THE Ile de France had been out only two days, but already Dick Crane and Jocelyn were separated by more than actual distance. From the moment they parted, the image of Mary Derbey consoling Dick lingered in Jocelyn's mind. And the too-valuable pearls that Mary had loaned her seemed indeed what Mary had intended them to be—the emblem of a life Dick could not share.

There was no time for homesickness. Rita was proving difficult about the stolen letters—and everything else. "It's going to be a ghastly trip," she not too flatteringly assured her guest. "Heaven knows how it will end, with that vulgar Franks creature after Ollie, and my letters gone——" She shivered. "Can't you do anything about it, Lynn?" Not for an instant did she allow Jocelyn to forget that all this was her fault.

It was on the tip of Jocelyn's tongue to tell who had the wretched things. Only her fear of an ugly and futile scene between Rita and Carrie Franks held her back.

Kindness Might Work.

No—quick wits or kindness alone might defeat that shrewd awarness with which Carrie defended her very special interests. Jocelyn decided to try kindness first, and for several mornings joined Ollie's playmate in the determined walks with which she sought to repair ravages of the night before.

"I had onion soup at six," she proudly informed Jocelyn this morning. "Three hours sleep, a shower, a pint of champagne—and here I am. With a nap after lunch, I'll be fine tonight."

Jocelyn shuddered. "I don't see how you manage."

Carrie Franks fished in her coat pocket for the big enamelled cigarette case she was never without. "You'd think the way I keep going, I'd be thin," she said. "But it's the champagne that puts weight on, though of course I'll never be fat."

"Of course not," Jocelyn agreed, glancing with her clear eyes at the rather jaded skin under powder, the careful scarlet lips and the metallic gleam of hair under the pert bright blue hat.

A Flat Refusal.

But under Carrie's chatter there was a lean alertness. When Jocelyn approached the subject of the letters her pinks and gold hardened. "They're safe enough in my care," she said dryly. "And I'm not expecting any interference from your friend Mrs. Keene, either. I've got a few plans, myself, for Paris—"

"Mrs. Franks, you know you're far too decent ever to use those letters." Jocelyn spoke earnestly. "I haven't told my friend that you have them. Won't you give them back to me?"

Tap-tap along the deck went the high heels, the blue sport suit. "I'm not giving anything back and that's my last word."

Carrie Franke snapped her lips shut and her cigarette case open. But her hands were not too steady this morning and Jocelyn had made her nervous.

The case slipped from her fingers, clattered to the deck. They were on the inclosed lower end with no one else in sight. As Carrie, stiff in her corset, bent to pick up the scattered cigarettes, Jocelyn glanced down. A clasp on the closed side of the case had sprung and with a quickening heart, Jocelyn saw that papers had been folded and tucked into the long oblong. So there was where the letters were hidden!

Carrie straightened with a swift, suspicious look, but Jocelyn was gazing out at cobwebs of foam, iridescent on the greenish blue water.

"I think you're making a mistake," she said as she walked off. "And I'll make it my affair to see that you don't harm my friends by using those letters in any way."

Such a Rude Man.

"If only I can get those letters, now that I know where she keeps them!" Jocelyn was thinking so intently as she swung along in the May sunshine that she didn't notice Ollie Keene lounging beside the deck rail until he called to her.

Then only did she see his companion, too—the last man on the ship she would have imagined with Ollie. It was Ogden Temple, who had held almost pointedly aloof from the Keene crowd. Even Rita had noticed it, remarking to Jocelyn with a touch of pique—"He can afford to be quite the rudest man in the world."

But Ogden Temple, looming above Ollie's slack girth, was gravely courteous, even when Ollie flippantly added to his introduction—"If any kings and queens climb back on their thrones, they'll have to go to Temple for the crown jewels. He's got 'em all."

"I've heard about your collection," Jocelyn said. "And you're a sculptor, too, aren't you?" Her eyes met his with a sense of shock at the commanding blue under his thick dark brows.

"Only an amateur." The low resonance of his voice was part of the man. Force dwelt in his high cheekbones, his thick nose, the heavy set of his jaw. A fascinatingly ugly man, as Jocelyn had thought of him. Then he smiled, and she knew why Rita had once said that he collected jewels and women. The mouth of a dreamer—of a lover of exquisite things. And Jocelyn, with her proud free grace of line, was exquisite.

Not Interested.

She moved now a little uncertainly. And in upon them crashed Carrie Franks, as bright and brazen as if she and Jocelyn were still on the best of terms. With an eye on Ogden Temple, she girlishly twined a hand around Jocelyn's arm, beaming at Ollie.

"La-zy," she said. "Mrs. Crane and I have had a long walk already."

Ogden Temple's glance flicked over her. With a brief bow, he walked deliberately away. Yes, he could be the rudest man in the world. Jocelyn excused herself and went to her cabin. As a supposed associate of Carrie Franks, she had lost Temple's interest. Oh, well, it didn't matter. She had only to think of Dick, his fair bright hair, his boyish gray eyes that could be so adoring. Her hand went up to Mary's pearl necklace. It was a gesture that had become instinctive.

By the last gala night on board before docking at Havre, Rita was in a bad state of nerves. Ollie had started drinking earlier than unusual. At the commandant's table at dinner—an honor even Mrs. Oliver Keene could hardly refuse—Ollie, sitting next to Jocelyn, fumbled and mumbled. It took all Jocelyn's strength to pilot him through.

It was very late, when Rita's nerves finally snapped. Bridge all evening had kept her occupied, though at 10 cents a point she lost heavily. Now it was nearly 3 o'clock. Ollie hadn't come down and Rita paced the floor of their suite.

"You might have stayed with him, Jocelyn," she reproached. "I saw that Franks creature waiting in the hall. You know I'm nearly frantic anyway about the letters, and now with Ollie acting this way—I won't have it. I tell you I won't have it——"

Scene of Revelry.

Jocelyn was no less frantic. Tonight had been her last chance at Carrie, and she had failed. Unless even now it was not too late—if Carrie had been drinking glass for glass with Ollie, which she usually did——

It was then the noise of revelry reached the portholes. Ollie's voice, Carrie's voice, other voices wild in laughter. They had sought the balmy night air.

Rita's small face grew white with fury. "I'm going to get Ollie myself," she declared. "And if I have to wake the captain, I shall have that horrible Franks woman ordered to her cabin."

"No, Rita—no!" Jocelyn, in a panic, caught at her arm. "You can't do that sort of thing. I'll go—Ollie will come down with me." Her long white gown soft and full about her slender hips, she fled to the deck.

Carrie Franks, in an emerald green chiffon, was performing a solo dance to someone's guitar, with Ollie, propped at the rail, clapping his hands in unsteady rhythm.

Jocelyn started toward Ollie. Stopped beside a steamer chair, hardly able to believe her luck. For trailing on the chair was the wrap that Carrie had obviously flung aside, and under its folds, just visible, was the enameled case which only yesterday had held the letters!

Theft Discovered.

Engrossed in her dance, Carrie swayed and spun. Holding her breath, Jocelyn sank into the next chair, her hand stealthy, deft. Was this how people felt who—stole? But she was only taking back what belonged to Rita. Yes—there were the papers in the compartment of the case released by a spring catch. Thank heaven! Quickly Jocelyn thrust the packet in her bodice.

But Carrie in her whirling had seen Jocelyn bend over her wrap; had seen the movement of her hand. "Say—what do you think you're doing?" Flushed and shrill, she suddenly advanced on Jocelyn, who rose to her slender height. "You give me back what you took." She blocked the way to the door.

Mrs. Nice Will Do Own Marketing When She Becomes Maryland's First Lady

Flowers and Home Her Hobbies; Interest in Bridge Playing Slight

Remains in Background of Political Affairs but Plans Return of "Traditional Hospitality" in Executive Mansion.

By Elizabeth Young.

THERE ARE NO airs, ingrained or affected, about Mrs. Harry W. Nice wife of Maryland's new Republican Governor-elect.

The turn of the wheel of fortune which places her husband in the highest political office in the State marks and will mark no change in the even and satisfactory tenor of the ways of a woman almost disappointingly sensible, matter of fact, and domestic by nature.

Life for her will go on as it has for years and years, with her husband as the central figure, and her devotion to him as its leitmotif. It makes no difference to her that the backdrop for the next four years is to be the Governor's mansion at Annapolis, instead of the familiar, almost equally spacious Nice home at 5701 Oakshire road in Mount Washington, a northerly suburb of Baltimore.

Mrs. Nice is a woman who believes in doing her own marketing. So she does it, twice a week.

"If I couldn't go to market, I'd just go crazy," she said, with a calm that reduced the specter of mental illness to a simple figure of speech.

Likes Diamonds.

She had just driven her car up the winding tree-lined labyrinth of suburban streets to the rear of her home, dumped her bi-weekly purchases in the kitchen, and, with a word to Annie, the cook, came quietly into the sitting room, still hatted, and coated, her gloves in her hand.

Her greeting and her handshake were perfunctory; her blue-eyed glance direct and non-committal. Frankly mature in figure, her jaunty black tricorn hat and shapely chiffon-clad ankles suggested a youthful chic. Half-hiding the old-fashioned yellow gold circlet on the third finger of her left hand was a magnificent diamond-encrusted ring.

A diamond-encrusted pin, long and wide, held the checked surplice of her plain black dress in place.

"Yes, I'm crazy about diamonds. Yes, they're my birthstone," she admitted.

"My hobbies? I love my flowers. I love my car. I love my home and my husband most of all. I'm not at all a clubwoman. I don't play golf. I'm not crazy about bridge. I wouldn't commit suicide if I couldn't find a game. I take Mr. Nice to his office every morning and bring him home every afternoon. Wherever he goes, I take him. He never goes alone. I wait for him when he's attending evening meetings. If he's at lodge, I go to the movies. He knows where the car is parked.

Tastes in Books Identical.

"Yes, we were married in 1905, and, as you see, I'm still living with him. I guess you'd call it a love match. I'm just as much in love with him now as the day I married him. Of course I try to please him. I think it's a woman's business to please her husband. If she really loves her husband, she'll try to please him."

Mrs. Nice has no patience with wives who court divorce by failing to cater to the creature comforts and cultural preferences of the men they marry. She has found it an agreeable and worthwhile task, doubly so because her own and her husband's tastes are identical in the matters of reading and making their home a magnet for their friends.

Mrs. Nice has no interest in Government politics as such, and no comment to offer on women in politics. Politics to her is a game which has engaged her husband's attention for 31 years, and her interest in it has been limited to a sympathetic indorsement of his aims and ideals. She feels she has best served him in politics by staying in the background of his life.

And so will she continue to serve him in the Governor's mansion, which will be their abode after the second Wednesday in January.

She promises a return there of "the traditional hospitality for which Maryland is noted." Mrs. Nice—"Who's Who in America" to the contrary—is not from Atlanta, Ga. She is a bred-in-the-bone daughter of Maryland. Her ancestors settled in Maryland in 1665—"the Ameses and the Waters"—and she was born, reared and educated in Baltimore, one of four children of the late James W. Amos, a builder, and Helen Gannon Amos.

Likes Lots of Company.

Brought up in a tradition of informal hospitality, Mrs. Nice said:

"You may be quite sure there will be plenty of social life with us in the governor's mansion. (No. I've never been there in my life. But doesn't it look like an overgrown boarding house? One would think there would have been a more stately, a more classic home provided Maryland's governors.)

"We've always been fond of lots of company. We like informal entertaining. Do we like house parties? We certainly do." She glanced reminiscently about the green-paneled living room, cheerful with rich rugs, gilt-framed mirrors and pictures, assorted easy chairs, and many baskets of flowers sent the Governor-elect.

"We've lived here 13 years, ever since we bought this house. We've done such a lot in fixing it up. Yes, this will be the first time we've ever lived away from Baltimore since we were married except for winters in the South." Mrs. Nice and the Governor-elect are leaving for Miami, Fla., Friday, to be gone a month.

On their return, she will begin—but not until then—to consider the problem of placing the imprint of the Nice personality on the Governor's mansion at Annapolis. She's undecided as yet just what to do about the Baltimore house, except she has no intention of leasing it furnished.

No Trouble With Servants.

"We may keep it open and run over occasionally," she said. "Of course I'll take my own servants." There are two: Annie, the cook, who's been with her 17 years, and Mary, the housemaid, whom she's had for seven years. "I've never had any trouble with servants," she commented. "No one does, if they treat them halfway decently; don't work them to death."

Members of the Nice household, in addition to the Governor-elect and his lady, are 25-year-old Harry Whinna Nice, jr., and "Buddy," a 2-year-old Boston bull pup, to whom the Governor-elect is known as "Daddy," and who stiffens his ears in tense delight at the word.

Women Voters Hail Age Rule In Beet Fields

Mrs. Baldwin Says Labor Clause Is New Type of Protection.

CHILD LABOR regulations in the sugar beet adjustment contracts just signed by the Secretary of Agriculture were commended yesterday by the National League of Women Voters.

Speaking for the women voters, who have long advocated eradication of child labor in this country, Mrs. Harris T. Baldwin, first vice president, said:

"The National League of Women Voters regards the child labor clause in the sugar beet contracts as a new type of protection against too severe child labor. For some time, children have been ruled out of factories and stores, but little progress was heretofore made in the effort to deal with child labor abuses in industrialized agriculture.

"The labor provisions, specifying that children under 14 shall not be employed and those between 14 and 16 shall not work more than 8 hours a day, is a recognition that the labor of little children in beet fields is unsound, economically and socially. We in the League of Women Voters believe that the child labor clause will benefit not only children but also adult workers."

What Today Means

"Scorpio."

IF NOVEMBER 15 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9 to 11 a. m., from 1 to 3 p. m. and from 6 to 8 p. m. The danger periods are from 7 to 9 a. m., from 3 to 5 p. m. and from 8 to 10 p. m.

If you allow anger or resentment to dominate your thoughts on this November 15, its retroactive result may be only harmful to yourself. It will be advantageous to clear your mind of any conception of fancied wrongs. High-pressure methods in business transactions are likely to only produce unfavorable results, so they should not be resorted to.

Invitations of a social nature should be extended only to those who will have no reason to feel that there is an ulterior motive prompting your action, otherwise they are liable to be regarded as a form of bribery and resented.

If a woman and November 15 is your birthday, your cheerful disposition before the day is over should become replete with a feeling of exuberance. You are due to have some very delightful surprises.

There is danger that a repeated confidential statement is liable to cause trouble, so remember discretion always pays. You will display wisdom by not always indulging your love for luxuries in things your practical sense warns against.

The child born on November 15, as a rule when it passes juniority, displays a mental superiority that will attract attention and usually lands it in a distinctly advantageous position to start its professional or business career right.

If a man and November 15 is your natal day, your optimistic spirit should carry you over the rough spots of life to the pinnacle of success. The pulpit, stage, lecture platform or political arena may offer the big chance for the results you desire.

Cornell Classifies First-Year Girls

Almost half of the freshmen women at Cornell University this year are daughters of college-bred fathers and mothers, according to a bulletin from the university. Thirty-nine of the 135 first-year girls have parents who attended Cornell.

Forty-three of the freshmen women are foreign-born. Among the 16 countries represented, Poland, Austria, Germany, Russia, England, Denmark, Ireland, Lithuania, Finland and Rumania have the largest groups.

Strictly Speaking

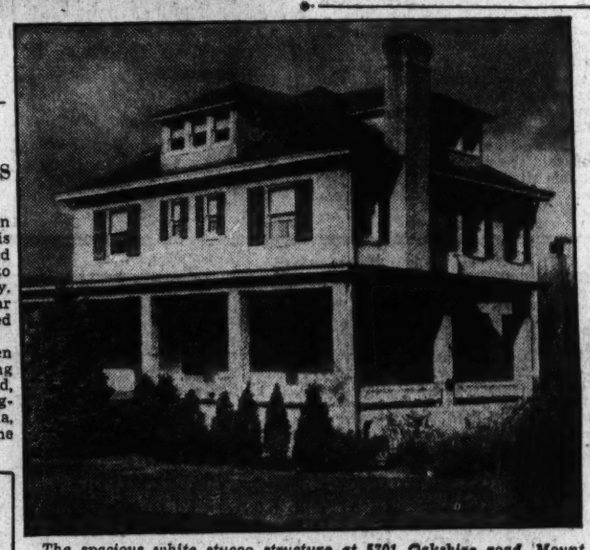
A Query.

November 12.—"In today's issue of The Post, your column, "Strictly Speaking," carried the sentence, "I thought it was he," and stated that this sentence is incorrect. I was taught in school such a sentence was correct, that the nominative should be used after was. Has this changed since I went to school?"—A Reader.

The Answer.

If you will look again at "Strictly Speaking" for November 12 you will see the sentence was not "I thought it was he," but "I took it to be he."

The former is correct, as the verb was is not followed by the objective case. But the sentence, "I took it to be he," is incorrect, just as it was stated in the feature of November 12. The noun after the infinitive "to be" must be in the same case as the noun or pronoun (in this case, "it") that precedes it. The same is true of any noun or pronoun following any infinitive.



The spacious white stucco structure at 5701 Oakshire road, Mount Washington, Baltimore, Md., shown above, has been home for 13 years to Governor-elect and Mrs. Harry W. Nice. Since purchasing the property they have made many improvements in house and grounds.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Hayworth.

DEAR MISS HAYWORTH: I can not refrain from offering a suggestion concerning "Stranger" and "Second Stranger." Would it not be well if they asked themselves what their reaction would be if their wives were considering the same plans as they are?

* * * *

The desire for romance after first youth has passed is perfectly natural, and the wives of these two men are probably experiencing the same longing.

* * * *

I speak from experience, because I have been married for 15 years to a fine man and have two lovely children.

* * * *

Suddenly I could stand my heart hunger no longer. It had been present all along, but I had never given any indication of it because of my pride. Then I realized my husband was becoming much attracted to some one else. And, through some power much greater than my own, and after a great deal of consideration, I was able to have a very frank sympathetic talk with my husband. The result has been complete restoration of love.

* * * *

Perhaps the wives of these two men haven't the type of courage I was able to muster, but I believe if the men themselves would take the initiative and spend thought and time wooing their wives, the result would be a rebirth of love.

HAPPY WIFE.

Oft Told Truth.

DEAR HAPPY WIFE: Your experience affirms the long-recognized truth that if husbands and wives would exercise the same strategy in preserving their mutual love, that they are willing to devote to extra-curricular emotional intrigue, a majority of divorces would never threaten.

* * * *

Moreover, it's lamentable that years of accustomedness so often developes between married persons a barrier of self consciousness so paralyzing that it prohibits articulate expression of the love they may feel or seek. You are to be congratulated on having the courage to break down this barrier.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

SOCIAL WORKERS urge the family to develop mutual interests for the welfare of the home. But how is the theory to be applied? By games which young and old can enjoy together, for one instance.

Laugh if you want to, but "jacks" afford fine family fun. If you don't believe it, get down on the floor some evening with a ball and a set of jacks and try it. Father's and big brother's large hands will excel when the jacks are scattered. Sister has her innings when they are so close together that dainty handling is required. Mother's girlhood skill will be regained with a little practice, and in the long run she is likely to be the champion of the family.

Parcheesi always arouses excitement. Any child who can count can play, yet the game is engrossing enough to interest the older members of the family.

Categories, in which the players write down the names of words in given classifications—animals, trees, birds, etc., beginning with specified letters, can be adapted so that it is easy or difficult, according to the general age of the players.

A ping pong set is inexpensive. And you don't need a table, although it is nice if you have space for one. If not, put the extra leaves in the dining room table and play there.

Conjure up memories of the games you enjoyed most as a child, and if there is any play spirit left in the old folks, they will have as much fun playing games as the children.

Saturday: Table Manners

For detailed description of family games, write Alice Fox Pitts in care of The Washington Post.

Parley Seeks Improvement In Rural Life

Institute Official Maintains Prosperity Depends on Better Farming.

ONLY WHEN people realize that the town and country are interdependent will prosperity return to stay.

"I learned that from Sir Horace Plunkett when I went to Ireland to study cooperative agriculture 25 years ago," Mrs. Charlotte Ware said yesterday in her room at the Dodge Hotel. "He used to tell us better farming meant better business and better living. And that is just as true today as it was then."

Mrs. Ware, who is secretary of the American committee on the International Institute of Agriculture, is attending the meetings of the American Country Life Association, which is holding a conference here this week.

Worthy Country Life Sought.

The American Country Life Association is a voluntary association of persons who are working together for a worthy country life in America," she said.

"Many members of the association are professionals in agricultural work, many farm women also belonging. On Friday night we are going to have a special conference of 300 farm women from 23 States, who will meet to discuss factors concerning rural home and community life.

"The association is trying to find out the economic and social needs of the country people, and to do everything possible to make life in the country as pleasant and easy as it is in the city."

The association meets annually to discuss subjects related to American farm life.

Meet People in Other Lines.

"These meetings are invaluable because they give the people working in agriculture the chance to meet people in other phases of the work, to compare notes and learn from them," Miss Grace Frysinger, of the extension division of the Home Economics Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, said.

At this conference national planning and rural life will be discussed. The first meeting will be held in the south building of the Department of Agriculture at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning. The meetings will be continued through Monday. Convention headquarters will be at the Raleigh Hotel.

Topics to be discussed are: Trends making adjustments and planning necessary, current experiments in national planning and in the light of the trends and the national plans under way—what should be done to improve the programs of agencies at work in rural America?

Thanksgiving in the Big Tree

We had to leave Billie and the Boys over at Blackie's house the other night, and let them all enjoy being together again, and besides, Jay Bird had to be over at Mr. Man's house early the next morning to see what would happen when Mr. Man missed his possum. You already know all that he found out to tell Blackie and so now we will see what has been going on in the big tree.

Blackie had had that big Christmas dinner last year, as you remember, and had had those big Sunday dinners of old ham and turnovers and things; but this was to be at least two kinds of a dinner, for besides being a regular Thanksgiving dinner, it was to be a Billie Possum dinner, but one at which Billie was to eat instead of being eaten.

Maybe Mr. Man and Rover Dog did catch another possum and maybe Mrs. Man did roast him brown, and have plenty of yellow yams. We don't know about that, for Blackie didn't care enough about it to send Jay Bird over to see what they were doing. Blackie had his laughing old Billie back, and both he and all the other Creek Folks would have been happy over a dinner of just bread and water, with Billie back to give them a grin now and then; but they were not going to have to do with bread and water.

Blackie and Jocko fooled around in the smokehouse and brought out this, that and the other thing, and put more pots and pans on those hot bars that were over the fire in that big round fireplace than you ever saw on one fireplace in your life. Jay Bird lived down there when the man ran the saw mill and cooked his dinners on the big fireplace, and he said that no such dinner had ever been on those bars.

Roast turkey, stuffed with parched peanuts and corn meal; roast pig from Mr. Man's house; baked apples from Uncle Joe's house and walnuts from the same place; and red apples—plenty of apples and—oh, well, just everything, and best of all, Billie Possum.

And you may just bet that they didn't forget about Hound Dog. He was at the dinner, and sitting on one side of Blackie, while Billie sat on the other side. And when Jay Bird told them how Hound Dog had gone right over and found Billie after everybody else had looked for him, Hound Dog just said: "Oh well, it really wasn't hard work, so I don't deserve any credit. What's the good of having a smelling sort of nose if you don't make it work for your friends?"

Historic Home Changes Hands

'Greenway,' at Leesburg, Is Sold to Vernon Knight, of Bronxville, N. Y.

Leesburg, Va., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—John Hill Carter, local realtor, has announced the sale of historic Greenway, located 1 mile south of Leesburg, to Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Knight, of Bronxville, N. Y., who, with their two children, will live there.

Charles Drayton, a Washington lawyer, purchased Greenway last summer from the Elmon Millers, but he never resided there. The Millers had owned the place for several years. At one time it belonged to Mrs. Miller's father, the late John H. Alexander, Leesburg attorney.

The farm contains 172 acres of rolling land with the Blue Ridge as a background. The large Colonial brick house at one time consisted of a huge kitchen and four adjoining rooms. It was built 183 years ago and its first master was William Meade. The brick for this part of the house was brought from England as were the bricks of the walks and the barn. Modern rooms have been added to the original structure.

When the Millers owned the estate a number of horse shows and other sports events were held there.

Pair at Hagerstown Held in Chicken Thefts

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—As a result of an investigation in the theft of thousands of chickens during the last year in Washington County, authorities arrested Harry Burger, 24, and Charles Swart, 23, both of this county, on charges of larceny of chickens from the premises of Virginia Wolfensberger, Maugansville.

Seven of the alleged stolen chickens, said the police, were recovered in this city, who also said the two men admitted selling the chickens here.

New Election To Be Fought

Brown and Levay Counsel Study Anne Arundel Deadlock.

Annapolis, Nov. 14 (AP).—Plans for court action to prevent a $7,000 special election to break a tie for a $600 office in Anne Arundel County were discussed today by the attorneys for the tied candidates.

T. Roland Brown, Republican, and John J. Levay, Democrat, each received 7,512 votes in the election for the seventh place on the board of county commissioners. Attorney General William Preston Lane, sr., has ruled that Gov. Albert C. Ritchie must set the date for a new election, and the Governor is studying his ruling.

Noah A. Hillman, attorney for Brown, discussed the situation with George B. Woelfel, attorney for Levay, and both are to confer with Judge William H. Forsythe, jr., before taking legal action.

Hillman, however, declared that a petition for a recount would be filed in any case on behalf of Brown. He said the petition would not be filed as that of a defeated candidate, but would allege irregularities in the election requiring a recount.

The attorney also held that the election could not be considered a legal tie unless so proclaimed by court action.

Bishop Aids Drive On Drunkenness

Hughes Tells Churchmen Change Is Needed.

Chestertown, Md., Nov. 14 (AP).—Asserting drunkenness and general recklessness have increased sharply since repeal, Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, of the Washington area, told 200 churchmen here the "time is ripe for another change."

The Methodist Episcopal Church leader addressed a rally to organize a new attack on "strong drink." He said drunkenness had increased 60 per cent since repeal and that "thinking people," seeing the effects of legal liquor, are veering away from it.

George Crabbe, secretary of the Maryland Antisaloon League, said Baltimore policemen had told him drunkenness, reckless driving, and accidental deaths from these causes had "increased alarmingly" since repeal.

Wife Slayer Admits Guilt; Life in Jail

Judge Says Plea of Layton Shifflett Was Wise.

Eight Children Will Be Cared for by Relatives.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—Layton Shifflett, 50, tenant farmer, pleaded guilty to killing his wife when he was arraigned for trial on a first-degree murder indictment in circuit court here this morning. He was sentenced to the State penitentiary at Moundsville for life.

Judge Decatur H. Rodgers, in pronouncing sentence, told Shifflett he thought his plea had been wise; that jury, hearing the details of the manner in which Shifflett beat his wife, probably would have decreed death.

Shifflett's response to the first inquiry as to his plea today was, "I feel that I am guilty." The court compelled him to give a categorical answer and he said "guilty." He offered no other statement.

Shifflett, until his plea in court, had denied all knowledge of the crime. He was arrested while asleep. Police said they found blood splotches on the walls and several weapons. Mrs. Shifflett died within an hour after children called a neighbor who at first was driven off by her husband at the point of a gun and who then summoned officers.

The Shifflett family came here about ten years ago from the Harrisonburg section of Virginia. The eight children of the family have been taken by relatives. Shifflett attempted suicide in jail shortly after he had been told of his crime.

Grange Degree Will Be Given To 60 Tonight

Ceremonies Take Place at Special Meeting of Pomona Group.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—The fifth degree will be conferred on about 60 candidates at a special meeting of the Pomona Grange, embracing nine subordinate granges in this county and three in Washington County, in the high school building, Middletown, tomorrow night. The candidates will represent all of the granges of the two counties and the degree work will be given by the Carroll County Pomona team, under the direction of J. Herbert Snyder, Union Bridge, a Pomona past master.

Davis Fry, Jefferson, master of the Frederick County Pomona body, will preside, and after a business session, at which preliminary plans will be announced for the annual convention of the Maryland State Grange in this city, December 4, 5 and 6, the initiation of the candidates will begin.

Other Degrees Planned.

The fifth degree is a preliminary to the sixth degree, which will be conferred the second day of the annual State meeting on about 125 candidates, and the seventh and final degree will be conferred at the annual national convention.

This year's national convention began today in Hartford, Conn., and will continue sessions about ten days. About 15,000 candidates from all over the United States will be given the seventh degree. Maryland candidates will wait another year before taking their seventh degree.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Frederick County Pomona Grange with subordinate organizations of New Market, Jefferson, Ballenger, Lewistown, Middletown, Myersville, Mount Pleasant, Braddock and Creagerstown, this county, and Leitersburg, Smithsburg and Indian Springs, Washington County, will be held at New Market December 1.

Will Act on Legislation.

In addition to the annual election and installation of new officers, action will be taken on legislation for the next General Assembly of Maryland, which will convene at Annapolis January 1. The Grange and Farm Bureau went on record favoring a State-wide income tax as a means of reducing the general property tax on real estate. Both bodies also favor an early re-assessment of real estate. Other business will include the adoption of reports and resolutions.

The new officers will be installed in the afternoon by Paul B. Levy, assisted by Paul Goodman, of the Glyndon, Baltimore County, grange. On account of the time occupied by the installation no special addresses are scheduled.

Strike Ends At Berkeley Woolen Mills

5-Month Deadlock Is Broken by Signing of Agreement.

Employer Will Take Back Strikers; Bars Trouble-Makers.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—A five-month strike at the Berkeley Woolen Mill here, affecting 350 employes, in which violence between strikers and police occurred as the mill closed, was settled today with signing of an agreement by the management, an agent for the employes and an agent for the citizens' committee, which has been laboring more than a month to settle the strike.

The company agrees to abandon its plan to close operations, to take back all former employes as rapidly as work justifies except those guilty of committing violence against the company, to honor seniority as far as possible, but to make efficiency the prime test for employment, and to exclude former employes who, in the company's judgment, can not be reemployed in the "peaceful and harmonious operation of its business."

The agreement also provides for a subcommittee of citizens to act as arbiters in all matters covered by the agreement. Their findings are to be binding upon both parties.

Dismissal of injunction proceedings in circuit court against a group of persons upon the peaceful reopening of the mill and at the discretion of citizens' committee also is provided.

Strikers' spokesmen, when the walkout occurred, said the action was in protest against discrimination against union workers in the plant, and against use of the "stretch-out" system of loom operation.

Clashes occurred when the plant attempted to operate despite the strike, and an agreement was reached within a few days after the strike on June 13 for full closing of the work and a discontinuance of picketing.

A small mediation group at that time attempted to find a basis of settlement but failed.

Early in October a mass meeting of citizens, after the announced intention of the management to close the plant here, set up a group to mediate both the woolen mill strike and one, not related, at the Interwoven mills here. The latter was settled three weeks ago through efforts of the citizens' committee.

Slocum is director of the employment service set up by the student organization and is cooperating in the drive.

Virginia League Wins $40,000 Spelman Gift

Alliance of Municipalities Gains Second Grant From Rockefeller Philanthropic Fund to Extend Work in Commonwealth.

Covington, Va., Nov. 14 (AP).—E. M. Stull, president of the League of Virginia Municipalities, today announced the Virginia League will receive a grant of $40,000 over five years from the Spelman fund of New York, one of the Rockefeller philanthropic foundations.

The grant is contingent upon the maintenance of the present league budget by the 106 cities and towns in the organization, and will make possible the extension of services needed urgently throughout the Commonwealth, President Stull said.

The new grant and the amounts to be paid by the cities and towns will provide a budget during each of the next five years to be used to extend the personnel training program for municipal officials, publishing a second edition of the municipal year book and providing a penmanent field service. The latter activity will embrace intensive research and analysis of important problems arising in individual cities and towns and will be provided at the request of mayors, councils and executive officers of the municipalities.

Grant Five Years Ago.

The league received a similar grant from the Spelman fund five years ago when it was agreed that at the termination of the grant the present league activities would be maintained by the cities and towns.

A special committee consisting of Harry P. Davis, mayor of Manassas, chairman; E. A. Zigler, Harrisonburg councilman; Dr. W. Dan Haden, Charlottesville Mayor; F. W. Townes, Danville councilman, and Thomas W. White, Newport News' vice mayor, voted unanimously to meet this obligation. As a result the Spelman Fund decided to make available additional funds for new services. Its report was approved by the league executive committee.

The cities and towns will be called on to meet only the present league budget without any increase, thus making up the money annually given by the Spelman Fund in the last five years.

The league is answering municipal queries at the rate of nearly 2,000 annually, conducting training schools for policemen, firemen and other municipal personnel units, publishing a monthly magazine, conducting a legislative service, rendering legal opinions, codifying ordinances, carrying on a municipal purchasing information service, acting as a secretariat for Virginia Police Executives Association, the building officials conference and the State Fire Chiefs Association.

Will Continue Bureau.

Moreover, the Bureau of Public Administration, housed at the University of Virginia, will be continued. The bureau is engaged in long-term research projects of value to municipalities, including the training of young men for public service.

President Stull today made the following formal statement:

"I am pleased to report that following numerous conferences between our league executive secretary, Morton L. Wallerstein, and Guy Moffett, executive of the Spelman Fund, the league has been offered $10,000 a year for the next three years and $5,000 a year for the following two years to be used in the extension of necessary services which should save hundreds of thousands of dollars to our municipal government. In my opinion, it was no small tribute both to the city and town officials of Virginia and to the staff of the League of Virginia Municipalities that this philanthropic foundation five years ago selected the Virginia league as the first to which it would extend assistance.

Construed as Approval.

"While no formal statement was made by the Spelman Fund, yet its offer of further assistance can only be construed as its approval of the league's valuable services to our cities and towns during the past five years and its belief that the league services require further development. I have at the instances of both a special committee of the league and our executive committee directed that the offer of the Spelman Fund be communicated to our municipalities for their approval."

Nice Forbids Costly Show At Inaugural

Debars Lavish Display, Naming F. W. Huber His Director.

Drs. Conley and France Confer With the Governor-Elect.

Baltimore, Nov. 14 (AP).—Frederick R. Huber, municipal director of music, today was appointed to direct the inauguration of Harry W. Nice as Governor, with instructions from the Governor-elect that there be "no lavish display" or extravagance at the inaugural.

The appointment was made during a busy day in which Nice was visited by Dr. Charles H. Conley, of Frederick, who polled nearly 100,000 votes in a primary campaign against Gov. Ritchie, the Democratic nominee.

Nice in the meantime was preparing to attend a meeting of the board of public works to discuss the financial groundwork of the State government. Members of the board are Gov. Ritchie, Comptroller William S. Gordy, jr., and State treasurer John M. Dennis.

In appointing Huber as director of the inauguration ceremonies in January, the Republican Governor-elect said:

"There will be no lavish display or disbursement of funds for the inauguration ceremony. The exercise will be simple, only enough to uphold the dignity of the State and the position of the office.

"There is too much hardship and there are too many people to be fed to warrant any great expenditure of funds for the inauguration."

Nice asserted Conley's visit had no political significance.

"Dr. Conley, whom I have known for many years and who is a personal friend," he said, "paid me a social call. He expressed his congratulations, which, I might say, made me very happy. There was no significance in the visit."

Other visitors of the Governor-elect included Dr. Joseph I. France, defeated for the United States Senate by George L. Radcliffe, the Democratic candidate.

Byrd Annoyed By Long's Back

Virginia Senator to Ask Transfer From Seat Behind Kingfish.

Waynesboro, Va., Nov. 14 (AP).—"Kingfish" Huey Long may occupy a political front seat in Louisiana, but Senator Harry Flood Byrd, of Virginia, is tired of looking at the back of his head.

"Either Huey or I change seats in the next session of Congress," the junior Virginia Senator said here last night, "even if I have to sit on the Republican side."

Senator Byrd said he will petition Vice President Garner to change his seat in the Senate to some place not directly behind the Louisiana "dictator."

Senator Byrd made this assertion in a humorous prelude to a chamber of commerce speech.

The Cumberland branch has paid out in mortgage loans $2,124,991.20, and $103,583.13 in taxes. This covers 630 loans, all of which were financed on bonds of the corporation, with the exception of 18 loans, 13 of which represented a 50 per cent cash loan of $3,500 and five represented 40 per cent cash loans, amounting to $9,000.

In addition, the reconditioning department has applications in excess of $25,000 for homes where loans already have been granted.

Payments out of the Cumberland branch over the four counties are: Allegany, paid out in loans, $1,162,028.17; paid out in taxes, $62,-860.79.

Virginia City Will Increase Its Facilities

Fredericksburg Votes to Add Sewerage and Gas Mains.

45 Houses Outside of Corporate Limits to Benefit.

Fredericksburg, Va., No. 14 (Spl.).—Extension of city sewerage and gas facilities to a group of 45 houses outside the corporation limits was voted by the city council last night. The council authorized the city to borrow up to $12,000 to finance the extension.

The order followed a proposal made several weeks ago by Benjamin I. Pitts to construct sewers and gas pipes to these homes on condition that the revenue derived by the city be directed toward repayment of the loan.

Appropriation of $72 was voted to provide coal for heating the armory occupied by Battery F, Eleventh Field Artillery, of the Virginia National Guard. Action was spurred by receipt of a letter from Adjt. Gen. S. Gardner Waller requesting more suitable provision for the battery and indicating possibility of the city's losing its National Guard unit unless housing conditions of the battery were improved. The council also voted $60 for coal for the Salvation Army.

Consolidation of the offices of assistant city engineer and clerk to the city manager was recommended by the council. Carlton Massey, present engineer, will fulfill the duties of both posts if City Manager Houston acts on the council's recommendation. The post of clerk to the city manager was vacated by the promotion of Kuszner Bauman former clerk, to the office of city treasurer, made vacant recently by the death of Clarence R. Howard.

Transfer of L. L. McWane, city clerk and civic leader, to the Culpeper office of the State Highway Commission from the Fredericksburg commission office was opposed by a council resolution. The resolution declared that Mr. McWane's proposed transfer was a routine matter and not a promotion, and requested the State highway department to retain him here.

Election of a city manager by the council was deferred for 30 days.

The Stern Face.

You've heard about the ancient king who never smiled again; he felt misfortune's grievous sting, as do all mortal men; his cheerful nature knew eclipse, his blood turned moldy green, and on his grim, unyielding lips no grin was ever seen. He cast a shadow on his court, and on the whole blamed isle; men said, "He is a tinhorn sport, or he would have a smile. We once had jollity and mirth in this our native land, it was the gayest spot on earth, before he took this stand. But since he wore a frozen face, resolved to smile no more, it is a ghastly, dreary place, with gloom on sea and shore." The men and women of that isle had their afflictions too, and probably they wept a while, and felt exceeding blue. They lost their nieces and their aunts, their cows at times went dry; the hoar frost nipped their growing plants, their bank accounts were shy. The monarch knew no greater woe than common people felt; they mourned around a month or so as hard as they could pelt; and then they shed their bands of crape, and burned their sable plumes, and dug up smiles of standard shape that hinted not of tombs. A king can fill his realm with grief by showing tear-wet eyes; his subjects will not find relief unless he smiles or dies. And every voter in his sphere should try to spring a laugh, and not look like a wounded deer, or like a dying calf.

Navy Asking No Odds Against Pittsburgh Saturday

Racing Scene Shifts to Nearby Bowie Track Today

Midshipmen Counting on Victory

Panthers Have a Great Team, "But We Good Too," Says Coach.

Pitt Drilling Hard for Battle and Willing to Match All Plays.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 14 (AP). Football experts said Navy couldn't beat Columbia, but it did; the sailors couldn't whip Notre Dame but they did.

Pittsburgh is figured far stronger, but 1,700 midshipmen believe that group they call Navy's "team of destiny" will hang a crown of thorns on the Panther's brow Saturday.

As they swing briskly along on the march, there is a noticeable air of cheerfulness among the trim-tailored future admirals. Private conversation with individuals brings the opinion that this is a Navy year, and the fleet will not be sunk.

Happy in Drills.

And out on Thompson Field, hustling to keep warm as an icy wind rides in from Chesapeake Bay, Tom Hamilton's small band of Navy gridders have been rushing happily through their preparations for the Panthers.

There's a lot of the old pepper evident in this Navy gang. "Take that, and that, and that," they yell, as they charge against imaginary Pittsburgh foes.

"Pittsburgh has one of the best teams in the Nation," Coach Hamilton admits. "But we have a good team, too. We'll go into this game just as we did into the others—to win."

Victors in seven straight games, Navy still has reserved a bag of scoring plays for Pittsburgh and the Army. Hamilton promises an entirely new offense for the Panthers.

New formations, new passes and a new running attack.

Counting on Tricks.

Navy dipped into its magic for slants to bewilder the Rose Bowlers of Columbia. Then it settled back to football without the frills. Hamilton has opened his bag again and the Middies feel his stuff will befuddle the Panthers, too.

Pittsburgh is powerful, but the triumph over Notre Dame showed the Sailors that alert, opportunist football may win over crushing power; that a team may be outrushed and still conquer.

And while the weight odds against Navy in the game with the South Bend Ramblers was great, Pittsburgh will have only a slight weight margin over the Middies.

Navy has waited a long time for this chance to lasso the Panther—22 long years.

In their first meeting, in 1912, Navy won, and the next year gained a scoreless tie. But in the four succeeding engagements the Pennsylvania team has won, a year ago by 34 to 6.

Pittsburgh is the favorite, but the Sailors thus far have asked no odds.

State Race Board Is Named by Ely

Three Are Named to Rule Tracks in Massachusetts.

Boston, Nov. 14 (AP).—Gov. Joseph B. Ely today appointed Gen. Charles H. Cole, recently defeated for the Democratic nomination for Governor by Former Mayor James M. Curley of Boston; William H. Ensign, of Westfield, and Charles Connors, Boston business man, to the new commission to supervise horse and dog racing in Massachusetts.

Gen. Cole was named chairman. The commission will have charge of the operation of horse and dog racing in any part of the State.

Under the terms of the act creating the commission the chairman will receive an annual salary of $5,000 and the other two members $4,000 each.

Cole was appointed for a term of three years, Ensign for two, and Connors for one year.

Army-Navy Game Reported Sold Out

78,079 Tickets Already Bought for Classic.

Annapolis, Nov. 14 (AP).—Swamped beneath a deluge of ticket applications for the Army-Navy football game on December 1 that exceeds the 78,079 seats available at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, the Navy athletic authorities today urged that no more requests be sent in.

Lieut. Comdr. Morris D. Gilmore, in charge of ticket distribution, said the game was already 12,000 seats oversold. He said that both West Point and the Navy had 5,000 more applications than they have seats available. The University of Pennsylvania has disposed of 10,000 tickets and has on hand applications for 2,000 more, he said.

Roanoke Grid Game To Be Played Saturday

Roanoke, Va., Nov. 14 (AP). Roanoke College authorities today announced postponement until Saturday at 2:30 p. m. the Maroons' game with Baltimore University, previously scheduled for Friday night. The shift was made because of impending cold weather.

St. Louis Sale Held Up by Headache

Wentz Reported Ill After Talking Millions With Sam Breadon.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 14 (AP).—Louis Haines (Lew) Wentz, Oklahoma oil multimillionaire, had a headache today and delayed saying "yes" or "no" to Sam Breadon's proposition to sell him control of the St. Louis Cardinals.

P. W. Prentiss, Wentz's secretary, said Wentz was "too sick to attend to business yesterday, but he is greatly improved today and probably will be entirely well by tomorrow." Prentiss described the oil man's illness as "nothing more serious than a severe headache."

"Mr. Wentz has Mr. Breadon's figure and is considering it," Prentiss said. "Nothing further has been done."

All Up to Wentz.

"I have not seen Mr. Wentz since Sunday," Breadon said. "However, he has my terms and the transfer of the Cardinals is up to his acceptance."

While Breadon's terms have not been announced officially, it is understood he is asking between $1,000,000 and $1,250,000 for his 77 per cent of the stock of the National League baseball club and its minor league "farms."

Branch Rickey, vice president and general manager of the Cardinals, is expected to become chairman of the organization if Wentz buys control, with the oil operator serving as chairman of the board.

Wentz, with millions under his control and a yen for baseball, has been negotiating for the Cardinals since before the World Series. Late yesterday it was learned the deal had reached the point where an early announcement of its completion might be expected

Just a Hobby.

Wentz, widely known in the Southwest as an oil operator, sportsman, philanthropist and Republican leader, seeks to buy the Cardinals in gratification of a hobby.

Breadon, who conducted the Cardinals along strict business lines, says he is going to take a long vacation and then return to his automobile busines if he sells the Cardinals.

Reports from the East that Breadon might seek to gain control of the Brooklyn National League Club are not taken seriously by his close friends, who believe "Uncle Sam" has tired, temporarily at least, of the perilous business of making profits out of baseball.

Breadon has been in control of the Cardinals since 1920. Since 1926 the club has won five National League and three world championships.

Equipoise Retirement Report Is Denied

Baltimore, Nov. 14 (AP). — Tom Healy, veteran trainer for the C. V. Whitney Stables, today emphatically denied reports that Equipoise would be retired to stud duty at Brookdale Farms, in Lexington, Ky.

"It is our intention," Healy said, "to race Equipoise in the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap, despite rumors to the contrary. So far as his retirement is concerned, there is no Brookdale Farms connected with the Whitney Stables."

Stanford Is Runner-Up To Gophers in Grid Poll

By Alan Gould.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14 (AP).—Stanford's Indians, now on the warpath on Pacific Coast gridirons, replace Alabama's Crimson Tide as the runner-up to mighty Minnesota tonight in the national ranking list of college football teams, compiled by the Associated Press from more complete returns in a poll among the country's leading newspaper observers.

Here's the revised order of the ranking in the "first ten," which includes five teams from the East, three from the Middle West, one each from the South and Far West:

	Games	Won	Lost	Tied
1. Minnesota		6	0	0
2. Stanford		7	0	1
3. Alabama		7	0	0
4. Pittsburgh		6	1	0
5. Princeton		6	0	0

7. Navy		7	0	0
8. Colgate		4	1	0
9. Ohio State		5	1	0
10. Syracuse		6	0	0

Additional and more representative returns today did not slacken the landslide for Minnesota. The Gophers have the votes of 50 out of a total of 65 experts for first place. The remaining 15 observers listed Minnesota second, with Stanford getting 8½ nominations for the top of the heap; Alabama, 5½, and Pittsburgh, 1.

Alabama's previous lead over Stanford for second place was wiped out by a rush of support for the Indians from West Coast observers. Opinions of all major gridiron sections are well represented in the poll, however. They

Hoyas-Terps May Draw Big Crowd

Preparations Under Way for Annual Clash at College Park.

WHILE the University of Maryland football team puts the finishing touches to its preparations for Saturday's game with Indiana at Bloomington, preparations have been launched at College Park to care for the crowd expected at next week's Georgetown-Maryland game.

Bleacher seats are being erected at both ends of Byrd Stadium, the Terrapins' home field, increasing its capacity from 8,000 to 14,000. The heavy demand for tickets indicates, however, that close to 17,000 fans will jam their way into the inclosure for the game.

Delegations to Come.

Georgetown alumni have chartered special trains from New York and Pittsburgh to bring delegations here, and plans have been launched for still another from Boston. A special block of seats has been reserved for them.

Maryland undoubtedly will enter the game a heavy favorite, if it emerges from the Indiana fray with Capital's Own Track Offers Six Stakes; No Steeplechase.

By Walter Haight.

THOROUGHBRED horse racing returns to Washington doorstep today with the opening of Bowie's 13-day meeting in nearby Prince Georges County. Located just 18 miles out the Defense highway, Prince Georges Park, as the Southern Maryland Agricultural Association likes to call the course, is looked upon as the Capital's own track and annually draws the bulk of its patronage from this city.

Bowie is more fortunate than other Maryland tracks in that it has no opposition in the East, the nearest racing being in far away Texas. Where other Maryland tracks were forced to string along with only a few horses, Bowie has more throughbreds than it knows what to do with. However, the abundance of horseflesh is a healthy sign. It means that owners will have fewer chances to race and must bear down each time they are entered.

Abundance of Horses.

One has to but glance at the entries for today to note the abundance of racing material available, now that the sport has been discontinued in New England. Exactly 102 horses sought entry today, more than there were positions on the blanks, and a large percentage of them can only see action in the event that there are scratches.

Although Bowie has the reputation sa "longshot track," or a course where the horses do not run true to form, this has not been the case in recent years. The theory dates back to the days when the oval was of the native sandy soil. In 1927 Bowie's track was completely covered by imported dirt, and in that season nine of the existing track records were lowered.

Now Bowie has a course that compares favorably with any in the State, and to hold a track record at the Prince Georges County course is indeed an honor.

Is Youngest Track.

Started in 1908, before mutuel betting was voted into Maryland, Bowie is the youngest in point of years of the Old Line State mile tracks.

The first of six stakes that dot the meeting is scheduled for today. The feature is the Bowie Claiming Stakes, a mile-and-sixteenth test for 3-year-olds and upward. The race, in the usual fifth place on the program, has drawn a formidable field. The majority of those entered have seen action in Maryland this season. Silent Shot is assigned top weight of 115 pounds, with Chartes and Carabinier II drawing 111 pounds each. Jester B., Red John and Steelhead, at 103, are the lightweights of the race.

A maiden race for fillies opens the program at 1 o'clock. Two allowance sprints and three claiming affairs complete the program. Bowie has no steeplechase course.

NEW WRINKLES THAT AVOID FORMAL BULGES

Went to a dinner party at Chevy Chase and one party at the dinner reminded me of a bullfrog on a black log. No matter how he squirmed, out would swell the starched dress shirt front. Some one should tell him about the Arrow Mitoga Dress Shirt at THE PALAIS ROYAL . . . the bulgeless creation of Arrow that absolutely conforms to body contours. This matches well with the new bird's-eye vests (white is smart with both dinner jacket and tails) that do their share in imparting immaculateness with comfort.

Injuries to Two Right Ends Jolt G. W. Hopes as West Virginia Game Nears

Ankles Hurt By Wright, Benefield

Pixlee Doubts If Either Play on Saturday; Skull Drill Held.

GEORGE WASHINGTON yesterday finished the heaviest part of its work for Saturday's game with West Virginia minus its only two experienced right ends.

The first casualty was Ab Wright, whose substitution for Ed Benefield at the position appeared to be permanent. The second was Benefield. Both were carried off the field with twisted ankles, sustained in a punishing scrimmage with an infuriated freshman eleven.

Their injuries placed Head Coach Jim Pixlee in a difficult position. The only man available for duty, if both are unable to start, is Henry von der Bruegge, who has been understudying Bill Parrish at left end. Pixlee last night entertained little hope that either Wright or Benefield would oppose the Mountaineers.

Holds Skull Drills.

Pixlee held skull practice last night, not in hope of finding new ends, but to better acquaint his men with West Virginia's formations. Another is scheduled tonight after dummy scrimmage on the field this afternoon. Tomorrow morning the team leaves by bus at 7 o'clock for Fairmount, where it will workout in the afternoon and spend the night.

The X on Mr. Pixlee's blackboard last night represented one John Thomas, who plays full back, and plays it well, for West Virginia. Thomas split Fordham's line wide open last Saturday with a bone-crushing series of plunges that seldom failed to gain.

"Stumpy" Allen is another marked man in the Mountaineer back field. He is a triple-threat half back and a fine broken field runner. He is the lad counted on to offset Tuffy Leemans' ball toting.

West Virginia is heading down the home stretch of the best season it has enjoyed in recent years. An upset, 7-0 win over Duquesne early in the year is the team's most notable achievement, though it held Pitt and Fordham throughout the first three periods of their games.

Cardozo and Dunbar In Title Battle Today

Cardozo Business High School gridders will meet the Dunbar High eleven today at 2:45 o'clock at Griffith Stadium in the first game of the District of Columbia colored interhigh school championship series.

Coach Jack Young stated yesterday that the Cardozo eleven was ready for the Dunbarites, which is the leader in the South Atlantic Conference. The final game in the series, Armstrong against Dunbar, will be played November 26. All games will be in Griffith Stadium, instead of Walker Stadium as previously.

Gallagher on Air.

Marty Gallagher, popular Washington heavyweight, will be featured on the weekly sports broadcast over Station WOL tonight between 8 and 8:15. Marty will discuss his impending bout with Ray Impellittiere and other topical subjects.

Championship Game Urged for Grid Cellarites.

Galesburg, Ill., Nov. 14 (AP).—A sports enthusiast came forth today with the suggestion that Knox and Hobart meet in a post-season football game to decide the supremacy for the game's all-time cellar championship.

Knox thought it had established a new national record for losing when it lost its twenty-fifth straight Saturday to Coe, but Hobart historians dug into their records and came up with a new mark of 27 consecutive setbacks.

Fraters Invade Norfolk on Sunday

Alexandria Gridmen Will Meet Clancys; Virginia Midgets Drilling.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—In their second hard test of the present football campaign the Alexandria Fraters face the Clancy A. C. at Norfolk Sunday.

Coach Nick Clasanto has issued orders for the entire squad to report at Baggett's tomorrow night for a lengthy drill.

Al Demming, Hardy Gensmere and Ellet Cabell have carried the brunt of the Fraters in battle during past battles. The record of the local team except for the Richmond game, which it lost, 13 to 0, is on par with that of former seasons. The locals hold two victories over the Clancys both by the same score, 7 to 0.

Coach Colasanto, Manager Gunny Davis and 18 players will make the trip by boat. The players and officials will gather at Prince street Wharf here at 6 o'clock p. m. Saturday night.

ePtey Sarron, the Birmingham flash, returned here today after a two-week trip to his home in Alabama. ePtey will fight in Philadelphia during the Christmas holidays.

Robert McDonald and Ray Cobean, local umpires, will attend the banquet in honor of the District Umpires Association tomorrow night at Schneider's Cafe, in Washington.

Mudder Wins Texas Ranger Feature

Despite Weather, 5,000 Fans See Arlington Track Program.

ARLINGTON DOWNS, Tex., Nov. 14 (AP).—Running a mile over a muddy track, Reservist, carrying 103 pounds, with Jimmy King up, won the $1,200 purse today in the Texas Rangers' Handicap event by beating Sun Monk, the favorite, by a nose. Money Getter finished third. Despite damp weather, there was a crowd estimated at 5,000 to watch the race. The winner, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Pollard, of Dallas, was away fast, but was allowed to retire off the pace. He lost ground on the turn, but after closing fast was under light pressure in the final stride.

Sun Monk, under strong riding in the final three-eighths, took command with a rush, but weakened and just missed. Money Getter weakened after showing good speed in the stretch.

The daily double winners, Peter Russell, in the second race and Durga in the third, paid the heavy mutuel of $795.10. Reservist paid mutuels of $10.70, $3.70 and $2.80.

Popular Tech High Coach

Hardell Is a Swell 'Guy,' Assert Tech Boys

By John R. Vosburgh.

YEARS come and go—other coaches resign or get fired—but dynamic Hap Hardell, Tech High's great little football and track coach, keeps turning out champions as steadily as ever.

How does he do it? What is there in the methods of this thin, slight man which has made him producer of more championship interhigh teams than all the other coaches in the city combined?

"The swellest guy in the world," his players call him.

But they like it. They swarm around him in droves during a game, begging to be given a chance to play. Over and over again they repeat the theme song of the Tech bench, "Put me in Hap, put me in Hap, put me in Hap," from the oldest regular to the lowliest substitute.

No Mollycoddler.

Hardell doesn't baby his boys. He seldom praises them. He's no tyrant, but he doesn't believe in mollycoddle. He has his own methods. In the Tech-Central game this year, for instance, a Tech full back was fumbling. Hardell took him out.

"What's the matter with you?" the coach asked. "Can't you hang on to the ball?"

"I wasn't fumblin', Hap," explained the boy. "Somebody took it away from me."

"Naughty, naughty," fired back Hardell. "You oughta tell him he shouldn't do that." The boy looked sheepish, grinned a little and slunk off to the bench. His teammates say he hasn't fumbled since.

While the ball is in play, Hardell is a show in himself. His antics are quite amazing to the uninitiated.

A bundle of nervous energy, he walks up and down in front of the bench, shouting somewhat like a madman, to nobody in particular. His shrill exclamations, uttered at rapid-fire speed, are usually unintelligible. He is a picture of impatience and restlessness.

Plays Are Scarce.

A Tech team is not burdened with a great many plays. The Hardell system is that used by great Michigan teams of history. Wing backs are tabod; so is the shift. A Hardell team is like a Colgate team. Deception is the keyword. Hidden-ball plays, reverses, end-around-end, spinners comprise the attack. Handling of the ball by two and three backs is common.

Hardell's coaching philosophy is simple. He bases it on fair play and frankness.

"Give a boy a fair deal," he says, "be sincere with him and he'll be sincere with you."

He has no blue laws. Yet in 14 years of coaching and handling of probably 400 different boys, Coach Hardell has run across but five men on his squad who persisted in smoking during the season.

Though a regular half back at Tech, back in 1923-12, Hardell did not play regularly at Michigan, where he went to college. He never weighed over 147 and failed to get further than sub quarter back. He ran on the Michigan track team, stepping the quarter mile in under 51.

Started as Drawing Teacher.

In 1920, he was called to Tech as a drawing teacher and began coaching track as well. In the past 11 years he has won seven inter-high track championships. He brought Tech out of a football depression in 1923, winning a title his first year as coach. Hardell has never had any better or any worse material than that of other schools. His teams have generally been lighter than their rivals, relying on speed and deception for the attack.

Tech's unofficial championship this year gives it the title for the ninth time in his 11 years of coaching. His team this year, Hardell classes among the best he ever coached, including the great teams of 1923, '28, '29.

Hardell has had several college coaching offers but has not deemed any favorable enough to accept.

Massanutten Bows, 7-0, To Strasburg Gridmen

Woodstock, Va., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—A rally late in the fourth quarter brought Strasburg a 7-0 victory over the Massanutten Academy eleven here today.

In the opening quarter, Massanutten team marched to the Strasburg 3-yard line on a series of line plays and reverses but was stopped when the visitors line braced.

A pass from Cooley to Newell put the ball on Massanutten's 15-yard line in the final period, and on the next play Rosenberger skirted the right end for the lone score. Richards plunged across for the extra point. The outstanding line play of Blank and Short saved the Massanutten goal on several occasions.

100 Fives Vie In Center's Leagues

Teams Won't Be Allowed to Take on Players After Jan. 15.

MORE than 100 teams have entered the basket ball leagues of the Community Center Department, according to Jack Haas, athletic director.

The Sunday School League, oldest of the loops, will play its games at the "Y," as will the Government League, Haas stated.

The Community Center major and minor leagues will function at Central, Langley, Hine, Roosevelt and Eastern gyms. Agriculture League will play its games at Macfarland and Government Printing Office at Langley.

In order to be eligible a player must be a bona-fide amateur, although he does not have to be registered with the A. A. U., Haas announced. No manager will be permitted to add players to his roster after January 15, and a team member must have played in at least two regular league games to be eligible to play in the finals of any championship.

Giant S. Dakota Line to Face Catholic

Invaders' Forward Wall Averages 205 Pounds; Backs Are Small.

THIS problem of whipping South Dakota Saturday is a weighty one for Dutch Bergman and his Catholic U. gridmen. A weighty one literally and figuratively.

Looking over the Coyotes' tentative starting line-up the figures reveal that their forward wall averages 205 pounds—the largest to perform here all season. Getting the comparatively light C. U. backs through this ponderous human barrier is Bergman's immediate problem.

South Dakota has Bob Bryan, a mere 197-pounder at left end, and Capt. Jack Illsley, only 213, at the other flank. They are ends, so Bergman has heard, that only the referee can get around.

Giants at Tackles.

Moving over to the tackles, we encounter a bit of real poundage in Roy Everett, 215, and Hank Schwartzkopf, 220. At these positions Coach Harry Gamage has sacrificed speed for brute strength to bolster the defense.

Jack Tobin, center, weighs only 198 pounds, while Bob Mehaus, left guard, scales 195 and Lysle Dyson, his running mate, comes in at a puny 199. Their lack of weight, naturally, is more than offset by speed and shiftiness.

Paradoxically, Dakota's back field will be an extremely small one that averages only 152 pounds wringing wet. The ball carriers look like mascots contrasted to the line, until they go into action.

Twins at Half Back.

Chappie O'Connor, quarter back, is the smallest man on the squad, weighing 145 pounds. The McNickle twins, Mar and Mel, half backs, total 300, and Len Sherwood, full back hits 165 after a full dinner.

Catholic is prepared to go into the air should the Coyote line be immovable. Bergman thinks the Cardinals should be able to work the airways with considerable success against the invaders' small backs.

A lengthy scrimmage with the freshmen yesterday topped off heavy work for the fray. Only light workouts are scheduled this afternoon and tomorrow.

Maryland A. C. Eleven Bolstered for Gunners

In preparation for Sunday's football game with Seaman Gunners at Duffy Stadium, the Maryland A. C. will practice tonight at the same field.

The game will be the first of the second half of the National City Unlimited Football League. Among the newcomers on the Maryland team are "Snail" DeLabre and Joe Leventhal, of the Mohawks and Billy Harris, formerly of Roosevelt High.

Golf Picture, "Follow Through," Gave Buddy Rogers Inspiration to Play Game

By Dave Herman.

BUDDY ROGERS, the handsome young maestro who is causing feminine hearts to palpitate at the Earle Theater this week, is something else besides a baton swisher and a movie actor.

Buddy is a golfer.

He gained his inspiration to play the ancient Scottish game about five years ago, he says, when the Hollywood producers selected him for the leading role with Nancy Carroll in "Follow Through," one of the first of the best talkie golf pictures.

And Buddy, believe you me, has been following through ever since, whether it be with a baton or a golf stick.

Obtained Expert Assistance.

An athlete in high school and college, Buddy admits that it didn't take him long to master the fundamentals of golf, what with the expert assistance of Olin Dutra, Horton Smith, Harry Cooper and a flock of California professionals. The Coast pros taught him the swing that made him look like a real golfer instead of an actor in his golf pictures, the young maestro stated.

His best score is a 78. It was made over the sporty Lakeside course in Hollywood, the "hangout," as he terms it, for the golf-minded movie folks. He will tell you that Bing Crosby was the one Hollywood golfer he always found "quite tough to handle."

Before embarking on his stage tour, Buddy and all his lads were in Chicago at the Hotel Sherman. In the Windy City he golfed constantly with Smith and Cooper, and from them picked up many valuable pointers, he said.

Supporter of Horton.

"Horton is one of the best natural golfers I've ever seen," the maestro said. "He is going to win an open title before he quits the game."

Buddy says that he has experienced three genuine thrills in golf. The first occurred when he shot his 78; the second when he outdrove three California pros by 50 yards, and the third when he saw Ed Dudley shoot a record-smashing 63 at Philadelphia Country Club three weeks ago.

"I couldn't take it after I hit my drive past the pros," the movie star said. "I whiffed the ozone with my second shot. Laugh that one off."

And about Dudley's 63, he said:

"My newly discovered singer, Red Harbur, and I played with Dudley, and he amazed us by shooting eight threes in a row, and breaking par by eight strokes. Izat golf or izat golf?"

Harbur, by the way, was the 175-pound broad-shouldered chap who played in 1930 and 1931 on University of Illinois' football team. One of his teammates was Gil Berry. He was handicapped considerably by a broken shoulder. Harbur was sent to Illinois by Red Grange, his personal friend, and only a year ago had a tryout with the Chicago Bears, later discovering that singing was his talent.

Eagles to Play 13 Games on Court

All Opponents Are From South Atlantic Section.

AN incomplete basket ball schedule of 13 games, comprised wholly of opponents from the South Atlantic sector, was announced last night for the American University quintet. Two more games will be added to the list.

The Eagles will meet four Chesapeake Conference foes—Hampden-Sydney, Randolph-Macon, St. John's of Annapolis and Bridgewater. Coach Walt erYoung, who already has the squad practicing, believes the team will make a strong bid for the championship this season.

Gallagher-Impellittiere To Fight Here Nov. 30

Marty Gallagher, local heavyweight, and Ray Impellittierre, gigantic Philadelphia battler, have been signed for a ten-round bout at the Auditorium November 30. A portion of the proceeds from the show will be donated to a Christmas basket fund.

Gaithersburg Unbeaten at Soccer

Montgomery County Title Won With Record of 6 Straight Victories.

SWEEPING through a six-game soccer schedule with a perfect record, Gaithersburg High School is today holder of its first Montgomery County crown in several years, succeeding the Sherwood booters, who dropped to fifth place in the final standings.

The Berchey-coached lads were scored on but three times, two goals from the eld and a penalty kick. Although the series was not official, the up-county lads deserve their mythical title, every school in the county being defeated by Gaithersburg except Bethesda, which was not represented, Damascus falling twice.

Extended by Rockville.

Rockville pressed the eventual winners throughout the schedule and it was not until the Berchey-men won over Silver Spring Friday, ending the season, that their victory was certain. The county-seat team was defeated only by the champions and had one more victory to its credit. Silver Spring took third place, losing to the leading teams and defeating Poolesville and Damascus.

Poolesville, the hard luck team, occupied fourth position. Coach Johnson's lads lost four of their five games by a margin of only one goal. They finished ahead of defending champions, hard hit by gradutations who played but an abbreviated schedule. Damascus retained its annual strangle hold on the cellar position with but one wine in eight games.

Specialized on Long Kicks.

The success of the Gaithersburg team is traced mainly to its heavier team and long distance booting, several kicks in the Silver Spring game last week raking the field for better than 65 yards.

Coach Bertchey announced that no attempt would be made to compete in State tourney. Sherwood competed last year and established a record by playing eight extra periods only to lose, 1 to 0. Final standings:

	W.	L.
Gaithersburg	6	0
Rockville	6	1
Silver Spring	2	2
Poolesville	2	5
Sherwood	1	3
Damascus	1	7

Wilson-Furr Bout Gets Official Stamp

Winner to Be Recognized as D. C. Welter Champ.

The winner of the Bob Wilson-Phil Furr bout at the Riding and Hunt Club next Monday night will be officially recognized as welterweight champion of the District, it was announced yesterday by the Boxing Commission.

Furr fell heir to the title by stopping Ray Bowen in a contest which had been sanctioned for the championship. Following his refusal to box Wilson, after having been signed for the bout by his then manager, Harry Groves, the commission considered depriving him of the title. It took no official action, however.

Both Furr and Wilson have been in active training for the past week for the contest. It has not yet been definitely decided whether the bout will be scheduled for 10 rounds or 12. That remains a detail to be arranged by the managers and Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn today or tomorrow.

British Defeat Italy.

London, Nov. 14 (U.P.).—England today won the unofficial football championship of the world by beating Italy, three goals to two, in the huge Arsenal Stadium.

Rippy and Burnett Enter Semifinals of Rock Creek's Turkey Golf Tournament

Ficco Is No Match for Medalist

Favorite, Two Over Par, Is Winner, 6 and 5; Fireman Beats Kong.

CLAUDE RIPPY, heavy favorite, and Volney Burnett, former "Uptown" champion, forged into the semifinals of the Rock Creek turkey golf tournament yesterday.

Rippy, medalist, eliminated Charlie Ficco, 6 and 5, and Burnett, in a much tighter match, defeated the Hawaiian star, Ben Kong, 3 and 1.

Thus the stage is set for a battle in the upper bracket between Rippy, foremost choice for the 1934 District municipal number one position, and Burnett, who was a kingpin among the public links boys long before Rippy migrated to the District from Shelby, N. C.

Rippy Drives Ninth Green.

In the other semifinals match—and there's no telling when either match will be played—Harold Bowers, the carefree Anacostia champion, will engage Pat Axtell, last year's turkey tournament medalist.

Always up, Rippy took a four-hole lead on Ficco at the turn, going out in 38, after amazing a handful of spectators by driving the 318-yard ninth hole, and scoring a birdie 3.

Rippy turned on the heat for the next four holes, winning the tenth with a par 4, the eleventh with a par 3, the twelfth with an eagle deuce and the thirteenth with a par 3 to end the battle. For the 13 holes the match lasted Rippy was only two over par figures.

He and Ficco probably set a playing time record by getting around in 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Kong 2 Up at Turn.

Burnett rounded the turn in 41 to Kong's 40, and quickly flashed into shooting stride. Two down at the time, he won the eleventh with a 3, the thirteenth with a 3, to even the count. Burnett took the fourteenth with a 4, the fifteenth with a 5, and, as a parting shot, nailed a 25-foot putt for a birdie deuce on the seventeenth to clinch the match. Powerless before such golf, Kong failed to win a hole on the back 9, which Burnett negotiated in 36, 2 over par. Burnett finished with 76 and Kong, 80.

Bob Marks entered the second flight semifinals with a convincing 3-and-1 victory over Neil Turner. In the fifth flight, R. M. Roudabush defeated C. Guttenplan, 5 and 4, and, in the women's division, Mrs. Florence Godfrey defeated Mrs. Dot Rider, 3 and 1.

District Grid Star Tops Villanova Tea

Villanova, Pa., Nov. 14 (Spl.).—Charley Nowe, one of the overlords of the Villanova forward wall, bears the distinction of being the only member of the Wildcat squad to have played four full games during the current season. The Washington, D. C. boy has seen 60 full minutes during the games with La Salle, Western Maryland, Detroit and South Carolina.

At center in the starting line-up for the past two years, Nowe, a member of the now famous trio from Canonsburg High, Pa., composed of Harry Patzsch, Arney Lee and himself, has distinguished his performance with very consistent passing and line play.

Tipping the scales at 184 pounds and standing five feet 11 inches, the snapper back of the main-line aggregation is winding up his college career in spectacular fashion.

Picinich May Pilot Memphis Ball Club

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 14 (AP).—The Press Scimitar today said Valentine John Picinich, veteran catcher, formerly with the Atlanta Crackers and who also played with the Philadelphia Athletics, the Washington Senators and the Boston Red Sox, is being considered for manager of the Memphis Southern Association baseball club.

Hoyas and Terps Expect Big Crowd

no serious injuries. The Terps are coming along at a furious pace, carving one of the schools best gridiron records in recent years.

But Georgetown will not lack for supporters. Defeated only by Richmond, and by one point at that, the Hoyas have been a pleasant surprise to their partisans this season. Beginning the year with gloomy prospects they have been eminently successful under Jack Hagerty's direction.

Brushes Up Offense.

Maryland spent yesterday brushing up on its offense, which was quite ragged against V. M. I. Monday, although strong enough to produce a 23-0 victory. Head Coach Jack Faber is anxious to top the Hoosiers in convincing style, and his team appears to be capable of doing it.

Georgetown, with no game scheduled this week, indulged in a scrimmage session with the Frosh yesterday and will have more heavy work tomorrow. The squad was not supposed to resume work until today, but with characteristic quarter back instinct, Hagerty suddenly decided to get going yesterday.

include 20 sports writers and editors from the East, 19 from the Middle West, 14 from the South and 12 from the far West.

The consensus revealed outstanding backing for the first five teams on the list, but the margin is thin otherwise. Today's tabulation resulted in Illinois and Navy each gaining a notch in the standing, whereas Colgate dropped two places, from sixth to eighth. Only two points—figured on the basis of ten points for first place, nine for second, etc.—separate these three teams.

It is noteworthy, however, that Colgate, although beaten by Ohio State, enjoyed a slight margin over the Buckeyes.

Slapping Is Barred In Maxey-Olin Fight

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14 (Spl.).—The village prize fights scheduled for next Friday evening at Madison Square Garden are more than usually colorful and meritorious of a little preliminary explanation. The chief protagonists are Maxey Rosenbloom, 175-pound champion, and Robert Olin, who will squabble for the light-heavyweight title; John Henry Lewis, about whose father I wrote yesterday, and James J. Braddock in what will be the most rousing and brutish exhibition of the evening, and young Peter Jackson, of California, and a sawed-off, stumpy-armed party from Boston named Sammy Fuller, who, because of an initially strange physiogonomy further altered by the exigencies of his trade, now resembles nothing so much as a Kobold right out Hans Christian Andersen.

The affair involving Rosebloom and Olin has caused more than the usual amount of comment because the members of the State Athletic Commission have decreed that Rosenbloom must keep his fists buttoned up at all times and must refrain from slapping his opponent with his open hand.

Mitten With a Zipper.

Fretted by this edict, Rosenbloom and his manager, a party by the name of Frank Bachman, visited the august administrators and presented for their approval a mitten with a zipper attachment or some contraption for keeping Mazie's fist closed, and were promptly thumbed out of the throne room. The present incumbents to the commission are not exactly noted for their humor.

It is, however, a popular fallacy to suppose that Rosenbloom slaps with an open glove. This would be of no particular advantage to him in combat, beyond humiliating his opponent. He has, however, a swinging punch that is very like a slap, and he does not always strike with the forepart of the knuckles as is directed by the book.

Sometimes he lands with the side of his hand, and sometimes, wth the second joints of his fingers. None of these are lethal punches, but they are most discomfitting. Also he punches rapidly and often, and from stances and angles that are weirdly unorthodox.

Champion for Years.

Rosenbloom has been champion for more years than I can remember. He does his training in cafes and night clubs, the way the late, great Harry Greb used to prepare for an important contest and, like Greb, too, he seems to be made of enduring stuff. A touring athlete, he gets himself licked at overweight matches by local prodigies and then returns and slaps them ruddy in the championship match. This John Henry Lewis, who fights Braddock, gave him one of his worst beatings, had him knocked out, in fact when foul was claimed and Rosenbloom was given time to recover. I have been picking Rosenbloom to lose his championship for years, but he always comes up with one of his marvelous half-clowning, half-earnest performances that leave his opponents a fine, healthy shade of pink and also losers.

Bob Olin, his opponent, is a curious boy. He has no stomach for prize fighting, and yet he has come a long way in his trade. He began in 1927 as an amateur in the New York Golden Gloves. He won the 175-pound championship and then went on to Chicago with the team and was stopped by a southpaw named Dave Maier after flooring him several times. Olin resigned. Since then he has fought practically all the good light-heavyweights, licked some, knocked some out and dropped a few decisions. For each fight he gets himself terrifically steamed up mentally, comes charging out of his corner ready to slay, fires a couple of Sunday punches, and if they don't do the business, begins to brood and lose interest.

Gets Melancholy.

Then his handlers in his corner must curse him and yell at him and revile him (which I have heard tem do) and plead with him. At the bell he will rise again full of honest determination, which last for some ten seconds, after which he relapses into melancholy and holds and wrestles. He spoke to me the other afternoon and he was again full of earnestness and determination. He told me that this menat everything to him and that he would fight to the last gasp. He was trembling with sincerity. I would prefer an athlete of mine to be little looser in the nerves before an important contest. If he nails Rosenbloom ih the first round and finds that he is not being seriously hurt by his punches I promise you he will become a raging lion.

The talk of collusion between the two athletes I do not believe particularly, because it is too patent. Rosenbloom's manager aided Olin's manager while in California by arranging several bouts for Olin. But when it comes to forfeiting a lucrative championship for the sake of friendship, that is something else again. Rosenbloom takes great pride in his championship, because if he weren't champion, no one would ever call upon him to stand The contest should be conducted up and be introduced at night clubs. with reasonable honesty and a good deal of zest and probably a maximum of interference by the referee at the behest of the commission.

Virginia Teams Facing Good Battles

Generals Are Seeking to Clinch Title With Win Saturday.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 14 (AP).—The last complete week-end of play for Virginia teams before the Thanksgiving Day classics will offer a trio of major attractions with a number of lesser engagements.

Washington and Lee's ambidextrous Generals with fingers in both State and Southern Conference championship pies will attempt to clinch the Virginia title at the expense of William and Mary's protesting Indians.

Spiders Play Wake Forest.

At Richmond, the Spiders, near the close of one of their best seasons in many a moon, will tackle Wake Forest's strong eleven, while V. P. I.—still holding an outside chance for the title should the Generals fall at Williamsburg—should march roughshod over Virginia's willing but weak Cavaliers.

Another Old Dominion eleven, Emory and Henry's Wasps—their record marred by unexpected defeats by William and Mary and Roanoke—will close a satisfactory season against Chattanooga at Johnson City. The Wasps, conquerors of Wake Forest and undefeated by an eleven outside of the State, are favored to end their season with a victory over their Tennessee eleven.

The game at Williamsburg may hold the State's sport spotlight with the Indians making an effort to gain some prestige before they go into the Thanksgiving Day finale with Richmond. They'll show the Generals a smart back field with Stumpy Bryant, a triple threater, the chief offensive weapon but the Indians' abi ytil tsotpooUg N xz v Indians' ability to stop Washington and Lee's big, hard-charging line was another matter.

V. P. I., knocked virtually out of the State championship running by the Generals in a fourth period rally several weeks ago, should gain back some of their lost ground at the expense of Virginia but Richmond's Spiders, defending a perfect record in games with out-of-State foes, face a stern test against Wake Forest's husky but ill-starred eleven.

Dodgers' Sale Is Causing Much Talk

Hot Stove League Now Is Concentrating on Fate of Brooklyn.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14 (U.P.).—Baseball's hot stove league, functioning full blast during an off-season that produces the most widespread and momentous deals in history, is concentrating right now on the question: Who will buy the Brooklyn Dodgers?

It is a cellophane-wrapped secret that the Dodgers are for sale, despite repeated denials from Judge Stephen W. McKeever, club president. And it was learned authoritatively today that they will be sold before 1935, if possible.

Watching St. Louis.

Hence those negotiations down at St. Louis are mighty interesting—negotiations which would transfer the Cardinals from Sam Breadon to an Oklahoma multi-millionaire, Lew H. Wentz. Hot stove leaguers understand that if Breadon gets the estimated $1,500,000 from wentz, he will be all set to buy up the Dodgers.

It seems that Breadon is a former Brooklynite, one who still hankers for the banks of the Gowanus, and who long has regarded his native bailiwick as the hottest baseball town in the country. During the past few years Breadon dropped several hints that he would be pleased no end to acquire the funny boys of Flatbush.

Back in 1927 owners of the Dodgers turned down an offer of $2,500,000 for the franchise, players and prperty.

Emory and Henry Wasps To Play Chattanooga

Emory, Va. Nov. 14 (Spl.).—An Emory and Henry College football team that has compiled a brilliant record will end its season Saturday by playing Chattanooga University at Johnson City. It will be a dedication game for the new Johnson City Municipal Stadium, which has been erected by the aid of Federal funds.

Whattaman!

Referee Shires Kayoed by Two Wrestlers.

Waco, Tex., Nov. 14 (AP).—Art (Whattaman) Shires, the bad boy of baseball, watched the finish of a mat match between Billy Edwards, 215, of Kansas City, and Pat Reilly, 200, of Washington, from a vantage point on the resin scented mat here tonight.

Shires, acting as referee, attempted to separate Edwards and Reilly, swapping healthy punches, and was promptly floored by a barrage of lefts and rights from both grapplers. Before he could regain his composure, Edwards sent a neat punch to Reilly's jaw to end the match.

Pegler Just Another "Guy," Knoxvillians Tell Huey Long

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 14 (AP).—Directors of the Knoxville Chamber of Commerce—27 of them—met today and instructed their secretary, C. F. Holland, to telegraph Senator Huey P. Long to bring 1,200 football fans here for the Louisiana State University-Tennessee football game December 8.

"Disregard Westbrook Pegler," the chamber of commerce will telegraph Long. "Pegler is not a Knoxville man and his views do not represent Knoxville sentiment."

Senator Long announced in Baton Rouge yesterday he would not make his football excursion to Knoxville unless the University of Tennessee had statements in a Knoxville newspaper corrected.

The Pegler article, published in the News-Sentinel, declared that Long had "assumed control of the football team of L. S. U. as an instrument of ballyhoo."

70,000 See England Soccer Team Victorious

London, Nov. 14 (AP).—England defeated Italy, 3-to-2, in their international soccer match before a huge throng here today. Outplayed during the first half, when England led three goals to none, the Italians braced in the closing minutes and Meazza pushed over two goals.

Occasional rainfalls did not keep down the attendance, which reached 70,000.

Mr. Khayyam, 9-10 Favorite, Moves Up in Stretch to Win Closing Pimlico Feature

Jockey Title Retained by Wright

Jabot Is Second and Kawagoe Third as 10,000 Watch.

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, Nov. 14 (Spl.).—Mr. Khayyam, the property of Mrs. James M. Austin, jr., has been fairly prominent around the Nation's race tracks this year. While playing second fiddle to Cavalcade and Discovery, the son of Khayyam has picked up almost $10,000 in purses. He added a sizeable sum today in the running of the closing-day feature at this course, getting up by a head in the closing strides to take a decision from C. V. Whitney's Jabot, which, in turn, saved the place by four lengths from G. D. Widener's Kawagoe.

Backed into 9-to-10 favoritism, Mr. Khayyam rewarded his backers with a courageous effort, and those who go in for wagering found the $3.80 mutuel return a satisfactory sum. As the race was run, Mr. Khayyam was not that sort of horse. However, the close finish made no difference in the pay-off lines.

Mr. Khayyam was one of three straight winners which allowed Jockey Wayne Wright to nose out Don Meade for the riding honors at this meeting just as he did at Laurel. The final jockey standing was 16 for Wright and 15 for Meade.

Kawagoe Sets Pace.

Kawagoe, which has been winning regularly in sprints was assigned the mile and 70 yards route today for the first time and for some six furlongs it appeared that he would be equal to the task. The Widener speedster had all the best of the early running, followed by Barn Swallow, the E. R. Bradley hope. Wright was content to let the leaders run until well up the backstretch, where he let loose a few wraps. Mr. Khayyam moved up on the inside in tight quarters, but Wright eased him out of the difficulty. In the run for the wire, Mr. Khayyam, despite his 120-pound assignment, overhauled the tiring Kawagoe and went on to stall off the closing rush of Jabot, a long shot in the betting. Kawagoe managed to hang on for the third money.

The day was more fit for ice skating than racing, but despite that fact some 10,000 witnessed the closing-day program.

Escapade Easy Winner.

The last steeplechase of the season proved little more than an exercise gallop for the $3.90 choice, Rigan McKinney's Escapade. The gelding just toyed with his nine rivals. The nearest he came to defeat was when W. Smiley nearly lost his seat at the final jump. The boy scrambled back into place and Escapade won by 20 lengths. Snake Charmer was given a lifeless ride. He had to make up a tremendous gap when finally called upon and got up to head Brad for the place.

Luck In, which finished last in a 12-horse field her previous outing, had her running shoes on today and managed to nose out Just Cap in the fourth race. Triolet came from many lengths out of it to annex the show, a length and a half away. Luck In ran a game race. She never could get clear but refused to quit under strong handling by J. Burrill, who lost his apprentice allowance by virtue of the victory. Luck In was a 4-to-1 shot. Easy Sailing, the favorite, ran a dull race.

Unencumbered Scores.

Jockey Wayne Wright and Unencumbered proved the winning combination in the fifth at odds of better than 4 to 1. Volta Maid trailed the winner by a length. Pass Shot might have been best, but Meade failed to ride up to his true standard and the favorite lost second money by a head. Volta Maid set the pace only to succumb to Unencumbered's challenge in the final drive. Pass Shot had to make up a big gap and then was pinched in behind Volta Maid on the rail in the stretch.

Wright rode the $4.20 favorite, Frumper, to an easy victory in the seventh race, rounding out a triple for the day and winding up the meeting as the leading rider, with 16 winners to Meade's 15. Neither boy had a mount in the last race.

Frumper began slowly, but ran over the others in the final quarter, scoring by five lengths. Kibitzer was second, three lengths before General Lejeune.

ESCAPADE much the best. He opened wide lead in first half mile and then just galloped along in front. He made a bad landing at the final fence and almost unseated rider but boy held and finally got back into saddle. SNAKE CHARMER was poorly ridden. He was allowed to gallop many lengths out of it for two turns of the field, closed with a rush and with a more energetic ride might have won. BRAD showed remarkable improvement over his recent effort. CELERITAS closed a big gap. LUCKITE quit badly after showing speed for 2 miles.

SISOWEN, slow to get into her stride, moved up fast around turn but was doing her best to win. STAR CHASE circled field entering stretch and finished very fast. OUR MAE, well up all the way, and made a game effort. GOOD AIM showed fine turn of speed for 5 furlongs, then tired. The others were never dangerous.

THIRD RACE—One mile and a sixteenth. Purse, $800; (claiming prices, $3,000 to $2,000). For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 2:35. Off at 2:36. M. J. BRENNAN assumed long lead going into paddock turn, was rated along to stretch where he began to tire, but gamely held on. JUSTA GLOW moved up very fast at end of half a mile and finished fast. SING SING, on the outside all the way, made a game effort. VOLGADALE had no mishap. CANIMAR was badly outrun.

FOURTH RACE—One mile and a sixteenth. Purse, $800; (claiming prices, $1,500 to $1,250). For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 3:02. Off at 3:02½. Winner, O. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LUCK IN, $10.00, $6.20, $4.60; JUST CAP, $8.10, $5.10; TRIOLET, $4.40.

LUCK IN, got away on her toes, was sent to the front early, saved ground at every stride and held on gamely. JUST CAP was hard ridden to get up, closed very fast in final furlong and would have won in a few more strides. TRIOLET, badly outrun for the first 6 furlongs, came around field and finished gamely. TIGHT WAD got his nose in front around turn but faltered badly at end. EASY SAILING had no mishap. REMROPREP quit badly.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—UNENCUMBERED, $10.50, $6.00, $3.80; VOLTA MAID, $8.20, $4.90; PASS SHOT, $3.00.

UNENCUMBERED, favored by intelligent handling, and not permitted to set the early pace, raced restrained back of the leaders for 6 furlongs, secured racing room on the inside until entering the homestretch, came to the outside and outfinished VOLTA MAID. Latter displayed good speed while setting the pace, and held on gamely when challenged. PASS SHOT, far out of contention for 6 furlongs. Was blocked when kept in behind the leaders during the closing furlong, only for which he would have been closer. FAIRLY WILD showed a good effort. BIG SHOW went evenly. CHATTERDO tired. STONE MARTIN raced far below his true form.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; allowances. For all ages. Start good from gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:00. Off at 4:02. Winner, Catawah Stable's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MR. KHAYYAM, $3.80, $2.70, 2.30; JABOT, $6.00, $3.40; KAWAGOE, $2.30.

MR KHAYYAM, taken under strong restraint in the first 5 furlongs, was messed about and allowed to drop back before reaching the final turn, then was steered to the outside. He closed fast under punishment and was up in the last sixteenth. JABOT, on the outside after reaching the backstretch, went to pacemaker rapidly, then fought it out stoutly at the end. KAWAGOE set a fast early pace, shook off BARN SWALLOW, but weakened during the closing furlong. BARN SWALLOW raced nicely restrained early, but was not good enough when placed to a drive. SUN ARCHER and MISS MONOA went well.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and three-sixteenths. Purse, $800; claiming. The Curtain Call. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:27. Off at 4:32½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FRUMPER, $4.20, $2.70, $2.40; KIBITZER, $2.90, $2.50; GENERA LEJEUNE, $2.80.

FRUMPER galloped along strongly in the early stages on his own courage, was shaken up leaving the backstretch then took command without effort at the stretch turn to draw out in the last furlong at will thereafter. He pulled up lame. KIBITZER placed close to the leaders early, gained command when ready but was no match for the winner. GENERA LEJEUNE held on well after setting the early pace. FOOTSURE began tiring after 7 furlongs, COAT TAILS was held safe. GOLDEN PLAY unseated his rider on the way to the post and ran away about a mile and one-half. CURTAIN CALL never was factor.

EIGHTH RACE—One mile and three-sixteenths. Purse, $800; claiming. The Curtain Call second division. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post, 4:55. KOZAK, breaking better than usual, and never far from the leaders during the early running responded nicely when put to a drive, then came with excellent courage during the closing drive to get up nearing the end. JUST FUN steadied along under mild restraint, shook off FAIR BILLY and held no resolutely for the final issue. BRIAR BLUE went prominently from the beginning and was easily best of the others. FAIR BILLY weakened badly after offering good contention until reaching the final turn. FAUX PAS was badly outrun. The others did not figure.

Panthers Drill On Aerials For Navy

Ready to Match Middies on Any Play in Big Game Saturday.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 14 (Spl.).—Prepared to meet laterals with laterals and forward passes with line bucks, the Pitt Panthers are being driven at a rapid pace this week in anticipation of a wide-open game at Annapolis where they meet the undefeated and untied Middies of the Naval Academy in the East's outstanding attraction this Saturday.

In their last opportunity to wipe out whatever stigma was attached to their narrow 13-7 defeat at the hands of Minnesota, the Panthers will be an aggressive football team when they take the field against Tom Hamilton's Middies. They showed the power that they can unleash against Notre Dame and Nebraska in successive triumphs.

Right now the Pitt machine is hitting on all cylinders. Led by three savage blockers in Izzy Weinstock, Ken Ormiston and Capt. Doc Hartwig, the Pitt attack has not been stopped. Only the insertion of the second team has kept the score down. Weinstock, right now, is the best full back in Pitt history. His blocking, his defensive play, his ball carrying and ball handling is making the Panthers a powerful scoring threat.

Those who have been watching Pitt football games since the beginning are not backward about their claims that Weinstock is the greatest Panther of them all, the finest all-around football player in Pitt history. His duel with the versatile Buzz Borries of the Navy will be well worth watching.

Pitt is somewhat crippled for the game with the Tars. Verne Baxter, crack right end, was injured in the game at Nebraska and is out of the line-up. His place will be taken by Vincent Sites, a rangy junior with plenty of weight, but lacking experience.

Jock Sutherland is depending upon sheer power to subdue the Midshipmen. He figures that the tricky Naval offense will score several times against Pitt, but that his players can score at least once more. The Pitt lateral attack which is used after the ball carrier is through the line and thus making long gains into touchdown territory makes the Pitt offense more dangerous than ever.

Bowie Race Track, Nov. 14.

Dear Al:

Well, here we are, fellow, back at the old stand. Be it ever so humble (and it isn't) there's no place like Bowie. Everything looks the same. The old house down at the stretch turn. The pine trees lining the backstretch, the stable boys' lunchroom, the W. B. & A. trains. I was out yesterday afternoon and a few horses on the track and a National Scratch Sheet would have made it a perfect setting. We didn't set the world afire at Pimlico, but we had our share of winners. While on the subject, I wish my Laurel friend would note that I did not brag about winners at Pimlico. However, there's still room for some notes. Twenty-one horses have been carried over from Pimlico on the schooling list, meaning that they must report each morning for trial starts until their post manners are O. K.'d by the starter. Among them is our old friend, Mouthpiece. Freddie Hopkins has 15 yearlings, belonging to the Sage Stable, in winter quarters at Belmont Park. A report that Equipoise would be retired and would not race in the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap, was denied yesterday by his owner, C. V. Whitney.

BILL.

First race—Gay Knightess gets one more chance. She hasn't run back to that fine showing in her first outing at Laurel. It is possible that she did not like the Pimlico track. I expect to see her true speed today. Valley Shannon and Happy Flag appear to be best of the others.

Second race—Corrymeela can run on any kind of a track, despite the fact that he has a reputation as a mudder. Robertson may ride today and I look for a winning effort. Feudal Lord for the place and Round Table to show. The last named awoke here once and Clocker Mike has been whispering about some good trials.

Third race—Rough Diamond was so sharp at Pimlico that I can not be swayed away from the Whitneyite. Official's last was a beaut and will figure in the payoff. Beyond Doubt may be a surprise.

Fourth race—Chartres, with the hustling Meade in charge of the saddle work, will be hard to beat in this heat. Chartres draws top weight of 118 pounds, but I'm stringing along. Garden Message's recent Pimlico effort can not be passed up entirely. Jamison should figure, but has too many apprentice marks for my book.

Fifth race—Silent Shot, another which would prefer the mud, has a class edge on this field. Meade is likely to ride and I look for a winning effort. Late Date has rounded into for and his closing rush should take care of part of the purse. Dust Girl is a possible upsetter.

Sixth race—Trumpery knocked at the dor over at Pimlico and seems to have found a spot here. St. Stephens and Dreel to take care of the others. Clocker Mike has noted some moves from Hope To Do. However, he hasn't impressed me this fall.

Seventh race—Foxland Hall, providing he draws a good rider, shouldn't toss off this purse. Marcasite and Deedie for the other awards. Dunfern is far down the list, but must be respected if in action. If you find out that Frank Hayes, the Mayor of Waterbury is at the track, you might get an across the board bet on Syriac. This one runs only when the boss is around.

Champion Skater Cancels Her Tour

Paris, Nov. 14 (U.P.).—Temperamental Sonja Henie, world champion women's figure skater, called off her exhibition tour of the United States in a huff today and cancelled reservations on the liner Paris, just as she was about to sail for New York.

The petite blonde Norwegian did this unexpected about face when notified that the Norwegian Skating Federation finally had granted her permission to give exhibitions in the United States.

Pitt-Navy Game 'Tough One' For Grid Contest Predictors

A WIDE divergence of opinion concerning the outcome of the Pitt-Navy game Saturday at Annapolis among Washington's football prognosticators has been revealed by The Post's Postilion contest.

Can the undefeated Middy eleven repulse the powerful Panther, or will Pitt repeat its crushing 34-to-6 triumph of 1933? Local fans lean toward Pittsburgh, according to the poll, although Navy has a host of supporters.

Charlottesville Church Praised For Mission Aid

Centennial of First Methodist Celebrated in 4-Day Meeting.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 14.—The centennial celebration of the First Methodist Church, which began four days ago, closed tonight with a sermon by Dr. H. P. Myers, pastor of Centenary Church, Lynchburg, who spoke on the missionary work of the church.

Dr. Myers praised the local church for having sent four missionaries to the foreign field. The first was W. W. Brockman, who went to China and was allocated to Y. M. C. A. work in Soochow in 1916. The next was Miss Sally Browne, daughter of the Rev. H. J. Browne, a superannuated minister who resides at the University of Virginia. She is now en route to Poland, after a brief vacation spent at her home here, to resume her duties as conference missionary secretary to the Polish mission.

G. C. Spiedel and his wife were sent out from the First Church in August, 1930, for mission work in Korea. Mr. Spiedel was educated at the University of Virginia, where he received his bachelor's and master's degrees, and taught in Lane High School before going to the foreign field.

The boat which carried the Spiedels to Korea also carried John Stroud and his wife as missionaries to China. Mr. Stroud had been licensed to preach from the First Church while he was a student pastor here in 1929-30. They now live at Shanghai, where he is engaged in the ministry.

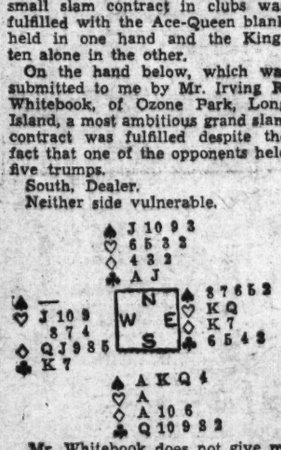
Capturing an Opponents Long Trump.

There have been many hands brought to my attention in the past few years wherein declarer is able to fulfill a slam contract despite the fact that one of the opponents holds more cards in trumps than either the declarer or dummy. These hands of course are usually made because the defensive player has to follow suit to a certain number of the declarer's high card tricks and then falls the victim of a perfect cross-ruff during the course of which he is compelled to helplessly undertrump either the dummy or the declarer's hand.

The classic hand of this type is one submitted to me by a Bostonite some years ago in which a small slam contract in clubs was fulfilled with the Ace-Queen blank held in one hand and the King-ten alone in the other.

On the hand below, which was submitted to me by Mr. Irving R. Whitebook, of Ozone Park, Long Island, a most ambitious grand slam contract was fulfilled despite the fact that one of the opponents held five trumps.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



Mr. Whitebook does not give me the optimistic bidding which must have occured to get North and South to seven spades and I am frank to admit I can not figure it out. I do believe, however, that six spades should be reached.

At any rate, against the seven-spade contract, which East was unwise enough to double, West won the heart Jack. South won with the blank Ace in his own hand and immediately took a club finesse. The Jack in dummy held the trick, and the Ace was then played, with West's King dropping. South immediately saw a ray of hope and played one round of trumps to see just how bad the division in that suit was. A low spade was led from dummy and won with the Queen in the declarer's hand—West, of course, showing out. South now cashed two good clubs, discarding diamonds from dummy. He now played the diamond Ace and then ruffed a diamond in dummy and continued by leading a heart, which he trumped in his own hand. At this point South claimed the remainder of the tricks on a perfect cross-ruff with high trumps. South fulfilled his contract by making seven spade tricks, four club tricks and two Aces.

South's play, of course, was very interesting and the only correct line of play in view of East's double and the suspected bad distribution. I believe the normal way to play this hand at a seven contract undoubled is as follows—the play being based on the assumption that the club King is right and that both clubs and trumps are divided normally. The declarer wins the heart Ace in his own hand and immediately takes a club finesse. After dummy's Jack holds, a heart is returned and trumped with one of South's high spades. Dummy is reentered with the club Ace and another heart trumped, again with a high spade. A club is now led from South's hand and trumped with the three in dummy, assuming that West is compelled to play the King and thus the suit breaks 3-3. South now trumps dummy's last heart in his own hand, again with a top spade, and, entering dummy by leading the spade four, draws the opponents' trumps with dummy's Jack, ten and nine, two diamonds being discarded from the South hand. A diamond is now led from dummy and South wins the last three tricks with the diamond Ace and two set up clubs.

The above outlined line of play is the normal one, assuming a normal division of the opponents' cards. The feature of the play is that instead of using dummy's trumps for ruffing purposes and subsequently drawing trumps with his own holding, the declarer should adopt exactly the opposite course.

Stocks Yield More Ground; Sales Lighter

Market Turns Selective; Trading Volume Cut to 958,460 Shares.

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—Demand for stocks was selective today and the market as a whole yielded a little more of the ground won on last week's broad advance.

Elsewhere along the financial front, a disposition to mark time was evident. Leading commodities sagged with stocks.

Trading in shares remained fairly active in comparison with the pre-election stagnation in speculative markets. Turnover totaled 958,460 shares against 1,131,330 yesterday.

Gold Flowing to U. S.

With more gold flowing toward the United States from Europe, political developments in the gold bloc countries were followed closely in Wall Street on the possibility they might lead to fresh monetary disturbances.

Apprehension on that score, however, was offset in a measure by further indications of a better domestic business trend and favorable dividend news.

The general list improved a little in tone as pressure lifted from utilitiy shares. After slipping more than a point in the forenoon and touching a new low at 22¾, Consolidated Gas rallied and closed off less than a point.

Gains on Buying.

Selective buying lifted Air Reduction, American Snuff, American Shipbuilding, American Safety Razor, American Tobacco B, Congoleum, Glidden, International Business Machines, National Lead and Reynolds Tobacco for gains of 1 to 3 points, some to new peaks for the year. G. W. Helme, spurted 5 points to a new top at 130 and Homestake Mining about 10 points on a transfer of 100 shares.

On the other hand, American Telephone, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward, General Electric, Sears Roebuck and other important shares sold off fractionally.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks dipped two-tenths of a point to 73.1.

Liquidation in Utilities.

Liquidation in utility shares, touched off in the preceding session by the New York Power Authority's report on electricity costs, diminished as reports reached Wall Street that President Roosevelt had stated he knew of no new moves for extension of Federal control over power companies.

Steel reports encouraged the belief in some quarters that business was looking upward beyond the period of the usual seasonal lift. The Iron Age, in its weekly review, described the outlook of the industry at "favorable." That trade organ estimated current steel operations at 27 per cent of capacity, a gain of ½ per cent over a week ago.

Statisticians estimated the weekly carloading report again would show less than the usual decline for this season. Dividend actions included declaration of an extra of 25 cents a share by U. S. Gypsum.

Relaxation of Foreign Exchange Restrictions Is Interpreted Generally as Evidence of No Immediate Devaluation of U. S. Dollar.

By Special Writer of The Post.

Relaxation of the restrictions on dealings in foreign exchange to permit any one to send funds out of the country for any purpose has been generally interpreted as evidence that further devaluation of the dollar is not in immediate contemplation and that the Administration has little fear of inflationary moves by Congress during the coming winter.

As a matter of fact, the strength of the dollar in terms of other gold currencies has been a matter of considerable concern to the Treasury. In recent weeks it has sold dollars in London and Paris in an effort to keep down dollar exchange rates and check an outflow of gold from the Bank of France. However, the disturbed political situation in France and the downfall of the Doumergue Cabinet started a capital flight which has led to considerable shipments of gold or engagements to ship gold both to Great Britain and the United States. Efforts to combat the effect of political fears which cause capital to flee from a country are more or less futile, although the flight may, of course, be offet for a time by supporting purchases of the affected currency.

At present, the position of the dollar appears to be fairly secure, and the chances seem to be against further devaluation for the time being. That does not mean, however, that de facto stabilization at the 59 per cent level can be regarded as assured. The ultimate stabilization rate may vary widely from the present level, depending partly upon the extent to which future budgetary inflation and credit inflation raise domestic prices and reduce the purchasing power of the dollar.

European Hoarders Believed To Be Buying Gold in London.

Under present conditions Great Britain is likely to remain a preferred refuge for gold hoarders. The Commercial and Financial Chronicle states that most of the gold available in the London open markets last week was believed to have been bought by European hoarders and left on deposit in the vaults of the great London banks. The question of what is to become of this hoarded gold when or if the gold standard is reestablished in Great Britain is a matter of growing interest.

The owners of gold mines and the people who have acquired gold for hoarding are directly and vitally interested in the future price of gold in terms of devalued currencies and in the maintenance of a market for their gold hoards. If their gold were to become unsalable, or if the existing premium had to be forfeited, they would be in a most unenviable position. French departure from the gold standard might be accompanied by a seizure of all privately owned gold held in France and in the other gold bloc countries which would no doubt follow France's lead. Furthermore, there is no absolute assurance that the London market will always remain a safe harborage for gold. In fact, there has been some agitation in a section of the British press, favoring a seizure of foreign gold at the statutory rate of 85 shillings per ounce.

Great Britain has been a favored hoarding center for the yellow metal because no obstacles have been placed in the way of holding or of free purchase and sale of gold, since abandonment of the gold standard in 1931. However, the currency and bank notes act of 1928 provides that the Bank of England may require any person in the United Kingdom owning gold or bullion in excess of £10,000 to sell it to the bank at the price of 85 shillings, provided such gold is not to be immediately exported or is not required for industrial purposes. The law in question was designed to prevent the London joint stock banks from reverting to their prewar practice of keeping large amounts of gold in their own vaults. In no case was it intended to apply to foreigners. Nevertheless, this law is regarded in some quarters as providing a possible legal basis for nationalizing gold holdings.

Trading in Gold Regarded As Safeguard Against Hoarding.

Probably one of the best safeguards against confiscatory appropriation of gold hoards by the British lies in the fact that such a procedure would destroy a valuable trade in gold as a commodity. A large proportion of the world's gold is produced within the British empire and is now selling at prices to yield excellent profits. The head of a gold mining company recently told a meeting of stockholders in London that the operations of the company are based on the expectation that the price of gold will remain at not less than 130 shillings per ounce for many years to come. He bases this belief on the assumption that the present gold value of the dollar will not be increased but more likely lowered. He also beieves that if France and the other gold bloc countries should desert the gold standard, the ultimate effect would be to raise, rather than lower the price of gold. These conclusions may be justified, but it would be rash to predict the future price of gold in a world which seems to want it chiefly for purposes of hoarding it.

$4,500,000 Gold Sent By Paris to New York

Cherbourg, France, Nov. 14 (AP).—A shipment of gold valued at 68,000,000 francs (about $4,500,000) was consigned by Parisian banks to be sent today on the S. S. Majestic sailing for New York.

The gold is going to the Irving Trust Co.

Bond Market Is Unsettled by Selling Drive

Secondary Rails Put Under Pressure; Trading, $12,367,000.

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—Selling pressure against secondary railroad and utility issues unsettled the entire bond market today and with few exceptions all classes of corporate loans sold lower. United States Governments were a trifle higher.

Transfers aggregated $12,367,000 par value, against $12,148,000 on Tuesday, and the Government turnover totaled $2,120,000, compared with $3,010,000. The Standard Statistics Co. average of 60 domestic corporate loans declined one-tenth of a point to 84.4.

Reports from Washington that further appropriations for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation might not be asked of the next Congress had an unsettling influence on carrier loans because the RFC has lent much financial support to distressed railroads in the past.

Lower Rates Drive.

Renewed agitation for lower rates was said to be responsible for the further losses in the utilities, which carried Consolidated Gas of New York 5½s to 105⅝, off 1⅛ on the day, and North American Co. 5s to 85¼, off 2⅜.

Other utility loans selling lower included obligations of Philadelphia Co., Southern Colorado Power, Utah Light & Traction and Utility Power & Light.

Bonds of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific and Chicago North Western Railroads were sold freely at losses up to around 3 points. St. Paul 5s were 1½ lower at 20¼, Northwestern 6½s were 2⅜ lower at 74 and the 4½s yielded 3½ points to 30.

Among Other Losers.

Other losers included obligations of Baltimore & Ohio, Rock Island, Illinois Central, Missouri Pacific, New Haven, Southern Pacific and Wabash.

A few industrials were in demand at slightly higher prices, including Sharon Steel Hoop 5½s, which added another 2½ points to the gains of the previous day and closed at 69. Others selling higher included issues of Trumbull Steel, Walworth, Western Union and Wilson & Co.

'34 Corn Pack Rises.

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—The 1934 corn pack totaled 11,119,140 cases against 10,245,359 cases in the 1933 season, according to the National Canners Association.

Curb's Prices Turn Mixed; Volume Rises

Some Specialties Gain; Transfers Advance to 199,000 Shares.

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—The curb market showed divergent trends in today's rather active session.

Utilities receded further during the forenoon, but largely recovered in the late dealings. A number of specialties registered substantial improvement, while small gains and losses were about evenly divided among metals, alcohols and oils.

Electric Bond & Share recovered after easing to a new low for the year. American Gas & Electric ended steady. Schiff Co., Parker Rustproof, Montgomery Ward "A" and Great Atlantic & Pacific were firm spots. United Shoe Machinery sagged 2½ points.

Steadiness prevailed in Swift & Co., Creole Petroleum, Sherwin-Williams, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Newmont and Wright Hargreaves, while Lake Shore, Aluminum Co. of America, Hiram Walker, International Petroleum and American Cyanamid B were easier.

Transfers approximated 199,000 shares, compared with 184,000 Tuesday.

Expenditures for New Plants By Leading Corporations Rise

New York, Nov. 14.—No discussion of business recovery prospects is complete without mention of the fact that political uncertainties have driven capital into hiding and that heavy capital expenditures on new plants will be withheld until profits opportunities are better defined.

The truth of the matter is, however, that numerous companies have recently undertaken or are planning relatively important capital outlays on new facilities, according to the Standard Statistics Co., of New York. The subjoined tabulation is obviously quite incomplete, but it clearly indicates that a few, at least, of the more important industrial companies are now willing to risk capital on new plants.

It is doubtless too early to assume, merely because certain leading strong companies are using idle cash assets to expand or improve plant facilities, that a rapid trend in this direction on the part of industry generally will develop. It is sufficiently significant that there are these definite evidences of a constructive future viewpoint.

A list of companies which have undertaken since January 1, 1934, or which contemplate capital expenditures of more than $1,000,000, follows:

Name of Company	Approximate Amount Involved
Ford Motor Co.	$15,000,000

Steel Output Rate Rises to 27 Per Cent

Expansion Is Hesitant, but Outlook Still Remains Favorable.

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—Although expansion has been hesitant, said Iron Age in its weekly review today, the outlook in the iron and steel markets remains favorable, with production still rising and scrap displaying increasing strength.

Mill operations rose to a national average of 27 per cent of capacity from 26½ per cent in the previous week.

"Expected orders from the automobile industry," said the summary, "have been slow in materializing.

"Price considerations are also causing the automotive trade as well as other steel consumers to defer purchases. While few if any important changes in quotations seem likely to be made for the first quarter of next year, buyers are disposed to wait until November 20, the time when price filings for the next contracting period will be made.

"Railroad buying remains subnormal but may revive if current preliminary discussions result in the adoption of a comprehensive plan for Federal loans.

"Ford has ordered $1,000,000 worth of machine tools and foundry equipment for the Rouge plant and will soon buy another $1,000,000 worth for Dearborn. The War Department will shortly take bids on $2,300,000 worth of machine tools."

Wheat Values Decline; Corn Hit by Selling

Liquidation and Realizing Push Cotton Down 7 to 10 Points.

Chicago, Nov. 14 (AP).—Broad general buying late today lifted corn to fresh high-price records for the season, but profit taking then largely wiped out gains.

Numerous traders in corn took the position that ultimately corn almost everywhere will sell well above the price of wheat. Much notice was given to assertions that elevators in the vicinity of Hutchinson, Kans., were paying 90 cents a bushel for No. 2 hard wheat and were asking $1 a bushel for corn on account of corn shortage.

Corn closed irregular at ⅝ decline to ¼ advance, compared with yesterday's finish; May, 82⅞@83. Wheat easy, ⅛@⅝ down; May, 99@99¼. Oats ¼ off to ⅛ up, and provisions varying from 2 cents setback to a rise of 25 cents.

In the late dealings today, corn was the market leader, affected especially by reports from central Illinois telling of very low corn yields per acre and by extreme scantiness of rural offerings of corn to arrive in Chicago. Handlers of corn here reported having booked a total of but 1 carload today, with actual arrivals of only 42 cars, against 85 a week ago and 259 at this time last year. Corn trade authorities said truckers were paying farmers stiff premiums above the terminal market basis.

Lifting of Curbs On Exchange Hailed In Street

Treasury's Move Regarded as Gesture of Cooperation to Bankers.

By W. R. Huff.

New York, Nov. 14 (AP).—The Treasury's removal of foreign exchange restrictions was greeted in Wall Street largely as a gesture of cooperation to the banking community. Its importance was somewhat discounted, except as it might encourage confidence in the future of the dollar.

Such restrictions as have been in force recently against the export of capital or against speculative transactions in foreign currencies have been extremely lenient, it was pointed out.

Few, if any, requests for licenses to carry out business of this nature have been refused by the Treasury, although it is believed the more outright forms of speculation doubtless were held in rein by the presence of a regulatory agency.

Dollar-Pound Stabilization.

In some quarters, the talk of a tentative dollar-pound stabilization was revived. Discussion of this kind has been prominent in the market in recent weeks, especially during the pound's tendency to remain in the neighborhood of $5, a point regarded generally as a logical pegging level.

It was recalled that Britain has gradually eliminated restrictions against foreign exchange dealings and investment abroad, and that London's capital market is virtually free from restraints.

Rumors of a dollar-pound move appeared particularly lively in London yesterday. British government securities were bid up in a striking manner, and 2½ per cent consols reached the highest price in 28 years. Talk of a reduction in the Bank of England discount rate also was heard.

Easy on Predictions.

Since no official comment on either side of the water could be obtained, and in view of the British government's often reiterated stand against the pound's early return to gold, New York bankers were inclined to go easy on such predictions. If any arrangement should be undertaken, it was expected to be experimental and informal.

The pound jumped up more than a cent in relation to the dollar on Monday, when the New York market was closed, but subsided somewhat in today's trading. The British unit was quoted today around $4.99⅞, after opening above $5.

The market's attention was still concentrated on European gold currencies, rather than on the pound. The Swiss franc, which had held up better than any of the other gold-bloc units, experienced a sharp break today in Paris.

This was reflected in a drop to 32.44 cents in New York, off .12 of a cent from Saturday. French francs lost fractionally, to remain substantially below the gold-shipping point to New York.

Everett Bout Tonigh Test For Tow

Visitor Installed Favorite At 6-5; Reed Battle May Steal Show.

BOB TOW, the Alexandria Adonis, and Buck Everett, the Hoosier hammerer, will go to the wars at the Auditorium tonight in a 10-rounder that gives promise of being the best heavyweight boxing contest yet held in the District.

The gambling gentry has installed the scowling, two-fisted puncher from Indiana a 6-to-5 favorite over Tow, but little is benig wagered on the outcome of the battle.

Although Everett has not appeared in competition in Washington, he has displayed a remarkable left hand, speed, footwork and punching power in training workouts. Closely resembling Jack Dempsey in appearance, ht fights on very much the same order exceptnig that his left hand shoots straight to the mark instead of hooking.

Exhibits Killer Instinct.

In gymnasium jousts, the conqueror of Dick Daniels, Charlie Belanger, Tony Cancela, Reds Barry and others, has exhibited a great "killer instinct." Given one small opening, he has, in practice bouts, always been quick to take advantage, and followed up with two-fistde flurries that have swept spar mates before them.

Tow has completely altered his fighting style since losing a very close decision to Natie Brown. The backing-away tactics he employed against Brown were instilled in him while training for Tony Galento. In training him for the Everett contest, his handlers have concentrated on making him come in with both fists flying to take the play away from his opposition.

Beverly May who, with his father, R. L. May, manages Tow, told The Post yesterday that Tow must either be more aggressive against Everett or consider himself no longer managed by the Mays.

Tow Must Set Pace.

"Bob is potentially a great fighter," May said. "Training him to stay away from Galento's murderous left hook proved his undoing against Brown. He must go in and set the pace against Everett. If he shows any inclination to back-pedal, we're through with him. If he goes down fighting, he's still a coming champ, in our estimation."

The card has been bolstered by an exceptionally good set of supporting features. Roy Manley and Jimmy Reed will be given an opportunity to settle an old and very bitter feud in a six-round "grudge fight" semifinal.

Three other sixes, a five and a four will round out the program.
